The law must oblige in all precepts, or in none. If it oblige in all, all are to be obeyed; if it oblige in none, it has no longer the authority of a law. Rogers.

2. To indebt; to lay obligations of gratitude.

He that depends upon another, must Oblige his honour with a boundless trust. Waller.

Since love obliges not, I from this hour

Assume the right of man's despotic power. Dryden.

Vain wretched creature, how art thou misled,

To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!

These truths are not the product of thy mind;

But dropt from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:

Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,

And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light.

Thus man by his own strength to heaven would soar,

And would not be obliged to God for more. Dryden.

When interest calls off all her sneaking train,

When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain,

She waits or to the scaffold or the cell. Pope.

To those hills we are obliged for all our metals,

and to them for all the conveniencies and comforts of life. Bentley.

3. To please; to gratify.

A great man gets more by obliging his inferiour, than by disdainning him; as a man has a greater advantage by sowing and dressing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it. South.

Some natures are so sour and so ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged. L'Estrange.

Happy the people, who preserve their honour,
By the same duties that oblige their prince!

Addison.

OBLIGE'E. n. f. [from oblige.] The person bound by a legal and written contract.

OBLIGEMENT. n. f. [obligement, French.] Obligation.

I will not resist, whatever it is, either of divine or human obligement, that you lay upon me. Milton.

Let this fair prince's but one minute stay

A look from her will your obligements pay. Dryden.

OBLIGER. n. f. He who binds by contract.

OBLIGING. part. adj. [obligeant, Fr. from oblige.] Civil; complaisant; respectful; engaging.

Nothing could be more obliging and respectful than the lion's letter was, in appearance; but there was death in the true intent. L'Estrange.

Monseigneur Strozzi has many curiosities, and is very obliging to a stranger who desires the sight of them. Addison.

Obliging creatures! make me see

All that disgrac'd my betters, met in me. Pope.

So obliging that he ne'er oblig'd. Pope.

OBLIGINGLY. adv. [from obliging.] Civilly; complaisantly.

Eugenius informs me very obligingly, that he never thought he should have disliked any passage in my paper. Addison.

I see her taste each nauseous draught,

And so obligingly am caught;

I bless the hand from whence they came,

Nor dare distort my face for shame. Swift.

OBLIGINGNESS. n. f. [from obliging.]

1. Obligation; force.

They look into them not to weigh the obligingness, but to quarrel the difficulty of the injunctions: not to direct practice, but excuse prevarications. Decay of Piety.

2. Civility; complaisance.

OBLIQUATION. n. f. [obliquatio, from obliquus, Lat.] Declination from straightness or perpendicularity; obliquity.

The change made by the obliquation of the eyes, is least in colours of the densest than in thin substances. Newton.

OBLIQUE. adj. [oblique, French; obliquus, Latin.]

O B L

1. Not direct; not perpendicular; not parallel.

One by his view
Mought deem him born with ill-dispos'd skies,
When oblique Saturn sat in the house of th' agonies.
Spenser.

If sound be stopped and repercussed, it cometh about on the other side in an oblique line. Bacon.

May they not pity us, condemn'd to bear
The various heav'n of an obliquely sphere;
While by fix'd laws, and with a just return,
They feel twelve hours that shade, for twelve that burn. Prior.

Bavaria's stars must be accus'd which shone,
That fatal day the mighty work was done,
With rays oblique upon the gallic sun. Prior.

It has a direction oblique to that of the former motion. Cheyne.

Criticks form a general character from the observation of particular errors, taken in their own oblique or imperfect views; which is as unjust, as to make a judgment of the beauty of a man's body, from the shade it cast in such and such a position. Broome.

2. Not direct; indirect; by a side glance.

Has he given the lie
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel; you must challenge him.
Shakspeare.

3. [In grammar.] Any case in nouns except the nominative.

OBLIQUELY. adv. [from oblique.]

1. Not directly; not perpendicularly.

Of meridian altitude, it hath but twenty-three degrees, so that it plays but obliquely upon us, and as the sun doth about the twenty-third of January.
Brown.

Declining from the noon of day,
The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray. Pope.

2. Not in the immediate or direct meaning.

They haply might admit the truths obliquely levelled, which bashfulness persuadeth not to enquire for. Fell.

His discourse tends obliquely to the detracting from others, or the extolling of himself. Addison.

OBLIQUENESS. } n. f. [obliquité, Fr. from OBLIQUITY. } oblique.]

1. Deviation from physical rectitude; deviation from parallelism or perpendicularity.

Which else to several spheres thou must ascribe, Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities. Milton.

2. Deviation from moral rectitude.

There is in rectitude, beauty; as contrariwise in obliquity, deformity. Hooker.

Count Rhodophill, cut out for government and high affairs, and balancing all matters in the scale of his high understanding, hath rectified all obliquities.
Howel.

For a rational creature to conform himself to the will of God in all things, carries in it a rational rectitude or goodness; and to disobey or oppose his will in any thing, imports a moral obliquity. South.

TO OBLITERATE. v. a. [oblitero, ob and littera, Latin.]

1. To efface any thing written.

2. To wear out; to destroy; to efface.

Wars and desolations obliterate many ancient monuments. Hale.

Let men consider themselves as in that unhappy contract, which has rendered them part of the devil's possession, and contrive how they may obliterate that reproach, and disentangle their mortgaged souls.
Decay of Piety.

These simple ideas, the understanding can no more refuse to have, or alter, or blot them out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate the images, which the objects set before it produce. Locke.

OBLITERATION. n. f. [obliteratio, Latin.]

Effacement; extinction.

Considering the casualties of wars, transmigra-tions, especially that of the general flood, there might probably be an obliteration of all those monuments of antiquity that ages precedent at some time have yielded. Hale.

OBLIVION. n. f. [oblivio, Latin.]

1. Forgetfulness; cessation of remembrance.

O B N

Water drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakspeare.

Thou shouldst have heard many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave. Shakspeare.

Knowledge is made by oblivion, and to purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brown.

Can they imagine, that God has therefore forgot their sins, because they are not willing to remember them? Or will they measure his pardon by their own oblivion. South.

Among our crimes oblivion may be set;
But 'tis our king's perfection to forget. Dryden.

2. Amnefty; general pardon of crimes in a state.

By the act of oblivion, all offences against the crown, and all particular trespasses between subject and subject, were pardoned, remitted, and utterly extinguished. Davies.

OBLIVIOUS. adj. [obliviosus, Lat.] Causing forgetfulness.

Raze out the written troubles of the brain,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom. Shakspeare.

The British souls
Exult to see the crowding ghosts descend
Unnumber'd; well aveng'd, they quit the cares
Of mortal life, and drink th' oblivious lake. Philips.

Oh born to see what none can see awake!
Behold the wonders of th' oblivious lake. Pope.

OBLO'NG. adj. [oblong, Fr. oblongus, Lat.]

Longer than broad; the same with a rectangle parallelogram, whose sides are unequal. Harris.

The best figure of a garden I esteem an oblong upon a descent. Temple's Miscellanies.

Every particle, supposing them globular or not very oblong, would be above nine million times their own length from any other particle. Beniley.

OBLO'NGLY. adv. [from oblong.] In an oblong form.

The surface of the temperate climates is larger than it would have been, had the globe of our earth or of the planets, been either spherical, or oblongly spheroidal. Cheyne.

OBLO'NGNESS. n. f. [from oblong.] The state of being oblong.

O'BLOQUY. n. f. [obloquor, Latin.]

1. Cenforious speech; blame; slander; reproach.

Reasonable moderation hath freed us from being deservedly subject unto that bitter kind of obloquy, whereby as the church of Rome doth, under the colour of love towards those things which be harmless, maintain extremely most hurtful corruptions;
so we peradventure might be upbraided, that under colour of hatred towards those things that are corrupt, we are on the other side as extreme, even against most harmless ordinances. Hooker.

Here new aspersions, with new obloquies,
Are laid on old deserts. Daniel's Civil War.

Canst thou with impious obloquy condemn,
The just decree of God, pronounc'd and sworn?
Milton.

Shall names, that made your city the glory of the earth, be mentioned with obloquy and detraction?
Addison.

Every age might perhaps produce one or two true geniusses, if they were not sunk under the censure and obloquy of plodding, servile, imitating pedants.
Swift.

2. Cause of reproach; disgrace. Not proper.

My chastity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obloquy i' th' world
In me to lose. Shakspeare.

OBMUTE'SCENCE. n. f. [from obmutescere,
Lat.] Loss of speech.

A vehement fear often produceth obmutescence.
Brown.

OBNO'XIOUS. adj. [obnoxius, Latin.]

1. Subject,

O B S

I propound a character of justice in a middle form, between the speculative discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers, which are tied and obnoxious to their particular laws. Bacon.

2. Liable to punishment.

All are obnoxious, and this faulty land,
Like fainting Hester, does before you stand, Watching your sceptre. Waller.

We know ourselves obnoxious to God's severe justice, and that he is a God of mercy and hateth sin; and that we might not have the least suspicion of his unwillingness to forgive, he hath sent his only begotten son into the world, by his dismal sufferings and cursed death, to expiate our offences. Calamy.

Thy name, O Varus, if the kindred pow'rs Preserve our plains, and shield the Mantuan tow'rs, Obnoxious by Cremona's neighb'ring crime,
The wings of swans, and stronger pinion'd rhyme Shall raise aloft. Dryden.

3. Reprehensible; not of sound reputation.

Conceiving it most reasonable to search for primitive truth in the primitive writers, and not to suffer his understanding to be preposited by the contrived and interested schemes of modern, and withal obnoxious authors. Fell.

4. Liable; exposed.

Long hostility had made their friendship weak in itself, and more obnoxious to jealousies and distrusts.
Hayward.

But what will not ambition and revenge
Descend to? who aspires, must down as low
As high he soar'd; obnoxious first or last,
To basest things. Milton.

Beasts lie down,
To dews obnoxious on the grassy floor. Dryden.

They leave the government a trunk naked, defenceless, and obnoxious to every storm. Davenant.

OBNO'XIOUSLY. adv. [from obnoxious.]

In a state of subjection; in the state of one liable to punishment.

OBNO'XIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obnoxious.]

Subjection; liableness to punishment.

proclaim a contrary law for the dissolution of the former. DiCt.

OBSCE'NE. adj. [obscene, Fr. obscenus,
Latin.]

1. Immodest; not agreeable to chastity of mind; causing lewd ideas.

Chemos th' obscene dread of Moab's sons. Milt.
Words that were once chaste, by frequent use grow obscene and uncleanly. Watts.

2. Offensive; disgusting.

A girdle foul with grease binds his obscene attire.
Dryden.

Home as they went, the sad discourse renew'd,
Of the relentless dame to death pursu'd,
And of the sight obscene so lately view'd. Dryd.

3. Inauspicious; ill-omened.

Care shuns thy walks, as at the cheerful light
The groaning ghosts, and birds obscene take flight.
Dryden.

It is the sun's fate like your's, to be displeasing to owls and obscene animals, who cannot bear his

OBSCE'NELY. adv. [from obscene.] In an impure and unchaste manner.

OBSCE'NENESS. } n. f. [obscenité, French,

OBSCE'NITY. } from obscene.] Impurity of thought or language; unchastity;
lewdness.

Mr. Cowley asserts plainly, that obscenity has no place in wit. Dryden.

Those tables were tempered with the Italian severity, and free from any note of infamy or obsceneness. Dryden.

Thou art wickedly devout,
In Tiber ducking thrice by break of day,
To wash th' obscenities of night away.
No pardon vile obscenity should find,
Tho' wit and art conspire to move your mind. Pope.

OBSCURA'TION. n. f. [obscuratio, Latin.]

1. The act of darkening.
2. A state of being darkened.

As to the sun and moon, their obscuratio or change of colour happens commonly before the eruption of a fiery mountain. Burnet.

OBSCURE. adj. [obscur, Fr. obscurus, Lat.]

1. Dark; unenlightened; gloomy; hindering sight.

Who so curseth his father or mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscur darkness. Proverbs.

Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss,
And thro' the palpable obscur find out
His uncouth way? Milton.

2. Living in the dark.

The obscur bird clamour'd the live-long night. Shakspeare.

3. Not easily intelligible; abstruse; difficult.

I explain some of the most obscur passages, and those which are most necessary to be understood, and this according to the manner wherein he used to express himself. Dryden.

4. Not noted; not observable.

He says, that he is an obscur person; one, I suppose, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

TO OBSCURE. v. a. [obscur, Latin.]

1. To darken; to make dark.

They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with *obscur*ed light; which at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night. Shakspeare.

Sudden the thunder blackens all the skies,
And the winds whistle, and the furies roll
Mountains on mountains, and obscur the pole. Pope.

2. To make less visible.

What must I hold a candle to my shames?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscur'd. Shakspeare.

Thinking by this retirement to obscur himself from God, he infringed the omniscience and essential ubiquity of his Maker. Brown.

3. To make less intelligible.

By private consent it hath been used in dangerous times to obscur writing, and make it hard to be read by others not acquainted with the intrigue. Holder.

There is scarce any duty which has been so *obscur*ed by the writings of learned men, as this. Wake.

4. To make less glorious, beautiful, or illustrious.

Think 't thou, vain spirit, thy glories are the same,
And see'st not sin *obscur*es thy godlike frame?
I know thee now by thy ungrateful pride,
That shows me what thy faded looks did hide. Dryden.

5. To conceal; to make unknown.

O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To sun or starlight, spread their umbrage broad. Milton.

OBSCURELY. adv. [from obscur.]

1. Not brightly; not luminously; darkly.

Such was the rise of this prodigious fire,
Which in mean buildings first *obscur*ely bred,
From thence did soon to open streets aspire. Dryden.

There live retir'd,
Content thyself to be *obscur*ely good. Addison.

2. Out of sight; privately; without notice; not conspicuously.

The woman's seed at first *obscur*ely told,
Now amplier known, thy favour and thy lord. Milton.

OBSCURENESS. n. f. [obscuritas, Latin,

OBSCURITY. n. f. [obscurité, French.]

1. Darkness; want of light.

Lo! a day of darkness and *obscur*ity, tribulation and anguish upon the earth. Esther.

Should Cynthia quit thee, Venus, and each star,
It would not form one thought dark as mine are:
I could lend them *obscur*eness now, and say,
Out of myself there should be no more day. Donne.

2. Unnoticed state; privacy.

You are not for *obscur*ity design'd,
But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind. Dryden.

3. Darkness of meaning.

Not to mention that *obscur*eness that attends prophetic raptures, there are divers things knowable by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear *obscur*e. Boyle on Colours.

That this part of sacred scripture had difficulties in it: many causes of *obscur*ity did readily occur to me. Locke.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in *obscur*ity, and has the undeterminate confusion of a negative idea, wherein I know I do not comprehend all I would, it being too large for a finite capacity. Locke.

OBSECRA'TION. n. f. [obsecratio, from obsecro, Lat.] Intreaty; supplication.

That these were comprehended under the sacra, is manifest from the old form of obsecration. Stillington.

OBSERQUIES. n. f. [obsequies, Fr. I know not whether this word be not anciently mistaken for exequies, exequiæ, Lat. this word, however, is apparently derived from obsequium.]

1. Funeral rites; funeral solemnities.

There was Dorilaus valiantly requiting his friends help, in a great battle deprived of life, his obsequies being not more solemnized by the tears of his partakers, than the blood of his enemies. Sidney.

Fair Juliet, that with angels dost remain,
Accept this latest favour at my hand;
That living-honour'd thee, and being dead,
With funeral obsequies adorn thy tomb. Shakspeare.

I spare the widows tears, their woeful cries,
And howling at their husbands obsequies;
How Theseus at these fun'erals did assist,
And with what gifts the mourning dames dismiss. Dryden.

His body shall be royally interr'd,
I will, myself,
Be the chief mourner at his obsequies. Dryden.

Alas! poor Poll, my Indian talker dies,
Go birds and celebrate his obsequies. Creech.

2. It is found in the singular, perhaps more properly.

Or tune a song of victory to me,
Or to thyself, sing thine own obsequy. Craslow.

Him I'll solemnly attend,
With silent obsequy and funeral train,
Home to his father's house. Milton.

OBSE'QUIOUS. adj. [from obsequium, Latin.]

1. Obedient; compliant; not resisting.

Adore not so the rising son, that you forget the father, who raised you to this height; nor be you so obsequious to the father, that you give just cause to the son to suspect that you neglect him. Bacon.

At his command th' up-rooted hills retir'd
Each to his place; they heard his voice, and went obsequious. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I follow'd her; she what was honour knew,
And, with obsequious majesty, approv'd
My pleaded reason. Milton's Paradise Lost.

See how th' obsequious wind and liquid air
The Theban swan does upward bear. Corwley.

A genial cherishing heat acts so upon the fit and obsequious matter, as to organize and fashion it according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.

His servants weeping, Obsequious to his orders, bear him hither. Addison.

The vote of an assembly, which we cannot reconcile to public good, has been conceived in a private brain, afterwards supported by an obsequious party. Swift.

2. In Shakspeare, it seems to signify, funeral; such as the rites of funerals require.

Your father lost a father;
That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term,
To do obsequious sorrow. Hamlet.

OBSE'QUIOUSLY. adv. [from obsequious.]

1. Obediently; with compliance.

They rise, and with respectful awe,
At the word giv'n, obsequiously withdraw. Dryden.

We cannot reasonably expect, that any one should readily and obsequiously quit his own opinion, and embrace ours with a blind resignation. Locke.

2. In Shakspeare it signifies, with funeral rites; with reverence for the dead.

I a while obsequiously lament
The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster. Rich. III.

OBSE'QUIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obsequious.]

- Obedience; compliance.

They apply themselves both to his interest and humour, with all the arts of flattery and obsequiousness, the surest and the readiest way to advance a man. South.

OBSE'RVABLE. adj. [from observo, Lat.]

- Remarkable; eminent; such as may deserve notice.

They do bury their dead with observable ceremonies. Abbott.

These proprieties affixed unto bodies from considerations deduced from east, west, or those observable points of the sphere, will not be justified from such foundations. Brown.

I took a just account of every observable circumstance of the earth, stone, metal, or other matter, from the surface quite down to the bottom of the pit, and entered it carefully into a journal. Woodw.

The great and more observable occasions of exercising our courage, occur but seldom. Rogers.

OBSE'RVABLY. adv. [from observable.] In a manner worthy of note.

It is prodigious to have thunder in a clear sky, as is observable recorded in some histories. Brown.

OBSE'RVANCE. n. f. [observance, Fr. observo, Latin.]

1. Respect; ceremonial reverence.

In the wood, a league without the town,
Where I did meet thee once with Helena,
To do observance on the morn of May. Shakspeare.

Arcite left his bed, resolv'd to pay Observance to the month of merry May. Dryden.

2. Religious rite.

Some represent to themselves the whole of religion as consisting in a few easy observances, and never lay the least restraint on the business or diversions of this life. Rogers.

3. Attentive practice.

Use all th' observance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent
To please his grandam. Shakspeare.

Love rigid honesty
And strict observance of impartial laws. Roscommon.

If the divine laws were proposed to our observance, with no other motive than the advantages attending it, they would be little more than an advice. Rogers' Sermons.

4. Rule of practice.

There are other strict observances;
As, not to see a woman. Shakspeare.

5. Careful obedience.

We must attend our Creator in all those ordinances which he has prescribed to the observance of his church. Rogers.

6. Observation; attention.

There can be no observation or experience of greater certainty, as to the increase of mankind, than the strict and vigilant observance of the calculations and registers of the bills of births and deaths. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

7. Obedient regard; reverential attention.

Having had such experience of his fidelity and observance abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him. Watt.

OBSE'RVANT. adj. [observans, Latin.]

7. Attentive; diligent; watchful.

These writers, which gave themselves to follow and imitate others, were observant spectators of those masters they admired. Raleigh.
Wandering from clime to clime observant stray'd,
Their manners noted, and their states survey'd. Pope.

2. Obedient; respectful: with of.

We are told how observant Alexander was of his master Aristotle. Digby.

3. Respectfully attentive: with of.

She now observant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm sun-set of thy various day. Pope.

4. Meantly dutiful; submissive.

How could the most base men attain to honour but by such an observant slavish course. Raleigh.

OBSERVANT. n. f. [This word has the accent on the first syllable in Shakspeare.]

A slavish attendant. Not in use.

These kind of knaves in this plainness,
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty filky ducking observants
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakspeare.

OBSERVATION. n. f. [observatio, from observo, Latin; observation, French.]

1. The act of observing, noting, or remarking.

These cannot be infused by observation, because they are the rules by which men take their first apprehensions and observations of things; as the being of the rule must be before its application to the thing directed by it.

The rules of our practice are taken from the conduct of such persons as fall within our observation. Rogers.

2. Notion gained by observing; note; remark; animadversion.

In matters of human prudence, we shall find the greatest advantage by making wise observations on our conduct, and of the events attending it. Watts.

3. Obedience; ritual practice.

He freed and delivered the christian church from the external observation and obedience of all such legal precepts, as were not simply, and formally moral. White.

OBSERVATOR. n. f. [observator, Fr. from observa, Lat.] One that observes; a remarker.

The observator of the bills of mortality, hath given us the best account of the number that late plagues have swept away. Hale.

Observing men may form many judgments by the rules of similitude and proportion, where causes and effects are not entirely the same. Watts.

2. To make a remark.

I observe, that when we have an action against any man, we must for all that look upon him as our neighbour, and love him as ourselves, paying him all that justice, peace and charity, which are due to all persons. Kettwell.

Wherever I have found her notes to be wholly another's, which is the case of some hundreds, I have barely quoted the true proprietor, without observing upon it. Pope's Letters.

OBSERVER. n. f. [from observe.]

1. One who looks vigilantly on persons and things; close remarker.

He reads much;
He is a great observer; and he looks Quite through the deeds of men. Shakspeare.

There is a kind of character in thy life,
That to th' observer doth thy history
Fully unfold. Shakspeare.

Careful observers may foretell the hour,
By sure prognostic when to dread a show'r. Swift.

2. One who looks on; the beholder.

If a slow pac'd star had stol'n away,
From the observer's marking, he might stay
Three hundred years to see't again. Donne.

Company, he thinks, lessens the shame of vice, by sharing it; and therefore, if he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it at least by a multiplicity of objects. South.

Sometimes purulent matter may be discharged from the glands in the upper part of the wind-pipe, while the lungs are sound and uninfected, which now and then has imposed on undistinguished observers. Blackmore.

3. One who keeps any law, or custom, or practice.

Many nations are superstitious, and diligent observers of old customs, which they receive by tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles. Spenser.

The king after the victory, as one that had been bred under a devout mother, and was in his nature a great observer of religious forms, caused Te Deum to be solemnly sung in the presence of the whole army upon the place. Bacon.

He was so strict an observer of his word, that no consideration whatever could make him break it. Prior.

Himself often read useful discourses to his servants on the Lord's day, of which he was always a very strict and solemn observer. Atterbury.

OBSERVINGLY. adv. [from observing.]

OBSJINACY. n. f. [obstinatio, Fr. obstinatio, Lat. from obstinatus.] Stubbornness; contumacy; pertinacy; persistency.

Choosing rather to use extremities, which might drive men to desperate obstinacy, than apply moderate remedies. King Charles.

Most writers use their words loosely and uncertainly, and do not make plain and clear deductions of words one from another, which were not difficult to do, did they not find it convenient to shelter their ignorance, or obstinacy, under the obscurity of their terms. Locke.

What crops of wit and honesty appear,
From spleen, from obstinacy, hate or fear. Pope.

OBSJINATE. adj. [obstinatus, Latin.] Stubborn; contumacious; fixed in resolution. Absolutely used, it has an ill sense; but relatively, it is neutral.

The queen is obstinate, Stubborn to justice, apt t' accuse it, and Disdainful to be try'd by't. Shakspeare.

Except you mean with obstinate repulse,
To slay your sov'reign. Shakspeare.

I have known great cures done by obstinate resolutions of drinking no wine. Temple.

Her father did not fail to find,
In all she spoke, the greatness of her mind;
Yet thought she was not obstinate to die,
Nor deem'd the death she promis'd was so nigh. Dryden.

Look on Simo's mate;
No afs so meek, no afs so obstinate. Pope.

OBSJINATELY. adv. [from obstinate.] Stubbornly; inflexibly; with unshaken determination.

Pembroke abhorred the war as obstinately, as he loved hunting and hawking. Clarendon.

A Greek made himself their prey,
T' impose on their belief, and Troy betray;
Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent
To die undaunted, or to circumvent. Dryden.

The man resolv'd, and steady to his trust, Inflexible to ill, and obstinately just,
Can the rude rabble's influence despise. Addison.

My spouse maintains her royal trust,
Tho' tempted chaste, and obstinately just. Pope.

OBSTRU'CTION. n. f. [obstru'ctio, Lat. obstruction, Fr. from obstru'ct.]

1. Hinderance; difficulty.

Sure God by these discoveries did design,
That his clear light thro' all the world should shine;
But the obstruction from that discord springs,
The prince of darkness makes 'twixt christian kings. Dennis.

2. Obstacle; impediment; that which hinders.

All obstructions in parliament, that is, all freedom in differing in votes, and debating matters with reason and candour, must be taken away. King Ch.

In his winter quarters the king expected to meet with all the obstructions and difficulties his enraged enemies could lay in his way. Clarendon.

Whenever a popular assembly free from obstructions, and already possessed of more power than an equal balance will allow, shall continue to think that they have not enough, I cannot see how the same causes can produce different effects among us, from what they did in Greece and Rome. Swift.

3. In physick.

The blocking up of any canal in the human body, so as to prevent the flowing of any fluid through it, on account of the increased bulk of that fluid, in proportion to the diameter of the vessel. Quinty.

4. In Shakspeare it once signifies something heaped together.

Aye, but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become A kneaded clod. Measure for Measure.

OBSTRU'CTIVE. adj. [obstru'ctif, Fr. from obstru'ct.] Hindering; causing impediment.

Having thus separated this doctrine of God's pre-determining all events from three other things confounded with it, it will now be discernible how noxious and obstru'ctive this doctrine is to the superstru'cting all good life. Hammond.

OBSTRU'CTIVE. n. f. Impediment; obstacle.

The second obstru'ctive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification, and excludes good works from contributing any thing towards it. Hammond.

The laborant with an iron rod stirred the kindled part of the nitre, that the fire might be more diffused, and more parts might be obverted to the air. Boyle.

A man can from no place behold, but there will be amongst innumerable superficieculæ, that looks some one way, and some another, enough of them obverted to his eye to afford a confused idea of light. Boyle on Colours.

An erect cone placed in an horizontal plane, at a great distance from the eye, we judge to be nothing but a flat circle, if its base be obverted towards us. Watts' Logick.

TO O'BIATE. v. a. [from obvius, Latin; obvier, Fr.] To meet in the way; to prevent by interception.

To lay down every thing in its full light, so as to obviate all exceptions, and remove every difficulty, would carry me out too far. Woodward.

O'BVIOUS. adj. [obvius, Latin.]

1. Meeting any thing; opposed in front to any thing.

I to the evil turn
My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won. Milton.

2. Open; exposed.

Whether such rooms in nature unpossess
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them, is obvious to dispute. Milton.

3. Easily discovered; plain; evident; easily found: Swift has used it harshly for easily intelligible.

Why was the fight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd,
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd?
Entertain'd with solitude,
Where obvious duty ere while appear'd unsought. Milton.

They are such lights as are only obvious to every man of sense, who loves poetry and understands it. Dryden.

I am apt to think many words difficult or obscure, which are obvious to scholars. Swift.

These sentiments, whether they be impressed on the soul, or arise as obvious reflections of our reason, I call natural, because they have been found in all ages. Rogers.

All the great lines of our duty are clear and obvious; the extent of it understood, the obligation acknowledged, and the wisdom of complying with it freely confessed. Rogers.

O'BVIOUSLY. adv. [from obvious.]

1. Evidently; apparently.
All purely identical propositions obviously and at first blush contain no instruction. Locke.

2. Opportunity; convenience.

Me unweeting, and unaware of such mishap,
She brought to mischief through occasion,
Where this same wicked villain did me light upon. Spenser.

Because of the money returned in our sacks are we brought in, that he may seek occasion, fall upon us, and take us for bondmen. Genesis.

Use not liberty for an occasion. Galatians.

Let me not let pass

Occasion which now smiles. Milton.

I'll take th' occasion which he gives to bring

Him to his death. Waller.

With a mind as great as theirs he came

To find at home occasion for his fame,

Where dark confusions did the nations hide. Wall.

From this admonition they took only occasion to redouble their fault, and to sleep again. South.

This one has occasion of observing more than once in several fragments of antiquity, that are still to be

3. Accidental cause.

Have you ever heard what was the occasion and first beginning of this custom? Spenser.

That woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occasion, let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool. Shakspeare.

The fair for whom they strove,

Northought, when she beheld the fight from far,

Her beauty was th' occasion of the war. Dryden.

Concerning ideas lodged in the memory, and upon occasion revived by the mind, it takes notice of them as of a former impression. Locke.

Your business calls on you,

And you embrace th' occasion to depart. Shakspeare.

5. Incidental need; casual exigence.

Never master had

A page so kind, so dutious, diligent,

So tender over his occasions. Shakspeare.

Antony will use his affection where it is:

He married but his occasion here. Shakspeare.

My occasions have found time to use them toward a supply of money. Shakspeare.

They who are desirous of a name in painting, should read with diligence, and make their observations of such things as they find for their purpose, and of which they may have occasion. Dryden.

Syllogism is made use of on occasion to discover a fallacy hid in a rhetorical flourish. Locke.

The ancient canons were very well fitted for the occasion of the church in its purer ages. Baker.

God hath put us into an imperfect state, where we have perpetual occasion of each other's assistance. Swift.

A prudent chief not always must display

His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array,

But with th' occasion and the place comply,

Conceal his force, nay, seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

TO OCCA'SION. v. a. [occasionner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To cause casually.

Who can find it reasonable that the soul should, in its retirement, during sleep, never light on any of those ideas it borrowed not from sensation, preserve the memory of no ideas but such, which being occasioned from the body, must needs be less natural to a spirit. Locke.

The good Psalmist condemns the foolish thoughts, which a reflection on the prosperous state of his affairs had sometimes occasioned in him. Atterbury.

2. To cause; to produce.

I doubt not, whether the great increase of that disease may not have been occasioned by the custom of much wine introduced into our common tables. Temple.

A consumption may be occasioned by running sores, or sinuous fistulas, whose secret caves and winding burrows empty themselves by copious discharges. Blackmore.

By its styptic quality it affects the nerves, very often occasioning tremors. Arbutnot.

3. To influence.

If we enquire what it is that occasions men to make several combinations of simple ideas into distinct modes, and neglect others which have as much an aptness to be combined, we shall find the reason to be the end of language. Locke.

OCCA'SIONAL. adj. [occasional, Fr. from occasion.]

1. Incidental; casual.

Thus much is sufficient out of scripture, to verify our explication of the deluge, according to the Mosical history of the flood, and according to many occasional reflections dispersed in other places of scripture concerning it. Burnet.

2. Producing by accident.

The ground or occasional original hereof, was the amazement and sudden silence the unexpected appearance of wolves does often put upon travellers. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

3. Produced by occasion or incidental exigence.

Besides these constant times, there are likewise occasional times for the performance of this duty. Duty of Man.

Those letters were not writ to all;

Nor first intended but occasional,

Their absent sermons. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

OCCA'SIONALLY. adv. [from occasional.]

According to incidental exigence; incidentally.

Authority and reason on her wait,
As one intended first, not after made

Occasionally. Milton.

I have endeavoured to interweave with the assertions some of the proofs whereon they depend, and occasionally scatter several of the more important observations throughout the work. Woodward.

OCCA'SIONER. n. s. [from occasion.] One that causes, or promotes by design or accident.

She with true lamentations made known to the world, that her new greatness did no way comfort her in respect of her brother's loss, whom she studied all means possible to revenge upon every one of the occasioners. Sidney.

Some men will load me as if I were a wilful and resolved occasioner of my own and my subjects

In case a man dig a pit and leave it open, whereby it happeneth his neighbour's beast to fall therein and perish, the owner of the pit is to make it good, in as much as he was the occasioner of that loss to his neighbour. Sanderson.

OCCCA'TION. n. s. [occæcatis, from oc-

cæco, Latin.] The act of blinding or making blind.

Those places speak of obduration and occæcation, so as if the blindness that is in the minds, and hardness that is in the hearts of wicked men, were from God. Sanderson.

O'CIDENT. n. s. [from occident, Latin.]

The west.

The envious clouds are bent

To dim his glory, and to stain the tract

Of his bright passage to the occident. Shakspeare.

OCCIDENTAL. adj. [occidentalis, Latin.]

act of killing.

To OCCLUDE. v. a. [occludo, Latin.] To shut up.

They take it up, and roll it upon the earths, whereby occluding the pores they conserve the natural humidity, and so prevent corruption. Brown.

OCCLUSSE. adj. [occlusus, Lat.] Shut up; closed.

The appulse is either plenary and occluse, so as to preclude all passages of breath or voice through the mouth; or else partial and previous, so as to give them some passages out of the mouth. Holder.

OCCLUSION. n. f. [from occlusio, Latin.]
The act of shutting up.

OCCULT. adj. [occulte, Fr. occultus, Lat.]
Secret; hidden; unknown; undiscoverable,

If his occult guilt
Do not itself unkennel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen. Hamlet.

An artist will play a lesson on an instrument without minding a stroke; and our tongues will run divisions in a tune not missing a note, even when our thoughts are totally engaged elsewhere; which effects are to be attributed to some secret act of the soul, which to us is utterly occult, and without the ken of our intellects. Glanville.

These instincts we call occult qualities; which is all one with saying that we do not understand how they work. L'Estrange.

These are manifest qualities, and their causes only occult. And the Aristotelians give the name of occult qualities not to manifest qualities, but to such qualities only as they supposed to lie hid in bodies, and to be the unknown causes of manifest effects.
Newton's Opticks.

OCCULTATION. n. f. [occultatio, Lat.] In astronomy, is the time that a star or the moon, or some other planet between it and us. Harris.

OCCULTNESS. n. f. [from occult.] Secret-ness; state of being hid.

OCCUPANCY. n. f. [from occupans, Lat.]
The act of taking possession.

Of moveables, some are things natural; others, things artificial. Property in the first is gained by occupancy, in the latter by improvement.
Warburton on Literary Property.

OCCUPANT. n. f. [occupans, Latin.] He that takes possession of any thing.

Of beasts and birds the property passeth with the possession, and goeth to the occupant; but of civil people not so. Bacon.

To OCCUPATE. v. a. [occupo, Latin.] To possess; to hold; to take up.

Drunken men are taken with a plain destitution in voluntary motion; for that the spirits of the wine oppress the spirits animal, and occupate part of the place where they are, and so make them weak to move. Bacon.

OCCUPATION. n. f. [from occupation, Fr.
occupatio, Lat.]

1. The act of taking possession.

Spain hath enlarged the bounds of its crown within this last sixscore years much more than the Ottomans: I speak not of matches or unions, but of arms, occupations, invasions. Bacon.

2. Employment; business.

Such were the distresses of the then infant world;
so incessant their occupations about provision for food, that there was little leisure to commit any thing to writing. Woodward.

In your most busy occupations, when you are never so much taken up with other affairs, yet now and then send up an ejaculation to the God of your salvation. Wake.

3. Trade; calling; vocation.

The red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,
And occupations perish. Shakspeare.

Voyages detain the mind by the perpetual occurence and expectation of something new. Watts.

OCCURRENT. n. f. [occurent, Fr. occurrens Latin.] Incident; any thing that happens.

Contentions were as yet never able to prevent tw evils, the one a mutual exchange of unseemly and un just disgraces, the other a common hazard of both, be made a prey by such as study how to work upon a occurrences, with most advantage in private. Hooker.

He did himself certify all the news and occurrences in every particular, from Calice, to the mayor and aldermen of London. Bacon.

OCCURSION. n. f. [occursum, Latin] Clash; mutual blow.

In the resolution of bodies by fire, some of th dissipated parts may, by their various occursum occusioned by the heat, stick closely. Boyle.

Now should those active particles, ever and ano justified by the occursum of other bodies, so order keep their cells without alteration of site. Glanville.

OCEAN. n. f. [ocean, Fr. oceanus, Lat.]

3. Particular; uncouth; extraordinary; not like others; not to be numbered among any class. In a sense of contempt or dislike.

Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense,
Such a dependency of thing on thing,
As e'er I heard in madness. Shakspeare.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white,
To make up my delight,
No odd becoming graces,
Black eyes, or little know not what's in faces. Suckling.

When I broke loose from writers who have employed their wit and parts in propagating of vice, I did not question but I should be treated as an odd kind of a fellow. Speator.

No fool Pythagoras was thought;
He made his list'ning scholars stand,
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand:
Else, may be, some odd thinking youth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the musick of the spheres. Prior.

This blue colour being made by nothing else than by reflection of a specular superficies, seems so odd a phenomenon, and so difficult to be explained by the vulgar hypothesis of philosophers, that I could not but think it deserved to be taken notice of. Newton.

So proud I am no slave,
So impudent I own myself no knave,
So odd, my country's ruin makes me grave. Pope.

To counterpoise this hero of the mode,
Some for renown are singular and odd;
What other men dislike is sure to please.
Of all mankind these dear antipodes. Young.

ODDLY. adv. [from odd.] This word and oddness, should, I think, be written with one d; but the writers almost all combine against it.

1. Not evenly.

2. Strangely; particularly; irregularly; unaccountably; uncouthly; contrarily to custom.

How oddly will it sound, that I Must ask my child forgiveness. Shakspeare.

One man is pressed with poverty, and looks somewhat oddly upon it. Collier.

The dreams of sleeping men are made up of waking men's ideas, though for the most part oddly put together. Locke.

This child was near being excluded out of the species of man barely by his shape. It is certain a figure a little more oddly turned had cast him, and he had been executed. Locke.

The real essence of substances we know not; and therefore are so undetermined in our nominal essences, which we make ourselves, that if several men were to be asked concerning some oddly-shaped fetus, whether it were a man or no? one should meet with different answers. Locke.

Her awkward love indeed was oddly fated;
She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.

As masters in the clare obscure,
With various light your eyes allure:
A flaming yellow here they spread;
Draw off in blue, or charge in red;
Yet from these colours oddly mix'd,
Your sight upon the whole is fix'd. Prior.

They had seen a great black substance lying on the ground very oddly shaped. Swift.

Fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped, according to the modification of their constituent salts, or the cavities they are formed in. Bentley.

ODDNESS. n. f. [from odd.]

1. The state of being not even.
2. Strangeness; particularity; uncouthness; irregularity.

Coveting to recommend himself to posterity, Cicero begged it as an alms of the historians, to remember his consulship: and observe the oddness of the event; all their histories are lost, and the vanity of his request stands recorded in his own writings. Dryden.

A knave is apprehensive of being discovered; and this habitual concern puts an oddness into his looks. Collier.

My wife fell into a violent disorder, and I was a little discomposed at the oddness of the accident. Swift.

So equal, none knew which was valiant'st. Hudlb.

4. Quarrel; debate; dispute.

I can't speak
Any beginning to this peevish odds. Shakspeare.
What is the night?
Almost at odds with the morning, which is which. Shakspeare.

He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds. Shakspeare.

The fox, the ape, and the humble bee,
Were still at odds, being but three;
Until the goose came out of door,
And staid the odds by adding four. Shakspeare.

Gods of whatsoe'er degree,
Resume not what themselves have given,
Or any brother god in heav'n:
Which keeps the peace among the gods,
Or they must always be at odds. Swift.

ODE. n. f. [ὕμνη.] A poem written to be sung to musick; a lyrick poem. The ode is either of the greater or less kind. The less is characterized by sweetness and ease; the greater by sublimity, rapture, and quickness of transition.

A man haunts the forest that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns and elegies on brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakspeare.

O run, prevent them with thy humble ode,
And lay it lowly at his blessed feet. Milton.

What work among you scholar gods!
Phœbus must write his am'rous odes;
And thou, poor cousin, must compose
His letters in submissive prose. Prior.

O'DIBLE. adj. [from odi.] Hatelul. Diſt.

O'DIOUS. adj. [odieux, Fr. odiosus, Lat.]

1. Hatelul; detestable; abominable.

For ever all goodness will be most charming; for ever all wickedness will be most odious. Spratt.

Hatred is the passion of defence, and there is a kind of hostility included in its very essence. But then, if there could have been hatred in the world, when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the compass of its proper object. South.

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence
Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince:
Expel from Italy that odious name. Dryden.

She breathes the odious fume
Of nauseous steams, and poisons all the room. Granville.

2. Exposed to hate.

Another means for raising money, was, by inquiring after offences of officers in great place, who as by unjust dealing they became most odious, so by justice in their punishments the prince acquired both love and applause. Hayward.

He had rendered himself odious to the parliament. Clarendon.

3. Causing hate; invidious.

The seventh from thee,
The only righteous in a world perverse,
And therefore hated, therefore so beset
With foes, for daring single to be just,
And utter odious truth, that God would come
To judge them with his fainls. Milton.

4. A word expressive of disgust: used by women.

Green fields and shady groves, and crystal springs,
And larks, and nightingales, are odious things;
But smoke, and dust, and noise, and crowds delight. Young.

O'DIOUSLY. adv. [from odious.]

1. Hatelully; abominably.

Had thy love, still odiously pretended,
Been as it ought, sincere, it would have taught thee Far other reasonings. Milton.

2. Invidiously; so as to cause hate.

Arbitrary power no sober man can fear, either from the king's disposition or his practice; or even where you would odiously lay it, from his ministers. Dryden.

O'DIOUSNESS. n. f. [from odious.]

A poor man found a priest over-familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad and could not prove it, the priest sued him before the bishop's official for defamation. Camden.

OFFICIALTY. n. f. [officialité, Fr. from official.] The charge or post of an official.

The office of an officiality to an archdeacon. Ayliffe.

To OFFICIATE. v. a. [from office.] To give, in consequence of office.

All her number'd stars that seem to rowl Spaces incomprehensible, for such
Their distance argues, and their swift return
Diurnal, merely to officiate light
Round this opacous earth, this punctual spot. Milton.

To OFFICIATE. v. n.

1. To discharge an office, commonly in worship.

No minister officiating in the church, can with a good conscience omit any part of that which is commanded by the aforesaid law. Sanderson.

Who of the bishops or priests that officiate at the altar, in the places of their sepulchres, ever said we offer to thee Peter or Paul? Stillingfleet.

To prove curates no servants, is to rescue them from that contempt which they will certainly fall into under this notion; which, considering the number of persons officiating this way, must be very prejudicial to religion. Collier.

2. To perform an office for another.

OFFICIAL. adj. [from officina, a shop.]

Used in a shop, or belonging to it: thus officinal plants and drugs are those used in the shops.

OFFICIOUS. adj. [officieux, Fr. officiosus, Latin.]

You are too officious
In her behalf that scorns your services. Shakspeare.

At Taunton they kill'd in fury an officious and eager commissioner for the subsidy. Bacon.

Cato, perhaps
I'm too officious, but my forward cares
Would fain preserve a life of so much value. Addison.

OFFICIOUSLY. adv. [from officious.]

1. Importunately forward.

The most corrupt are most obsequious grown,
And those they scorn'd, officiously they own. Dryd.

Flatt'ring crowds officiously appear,
To give themselves, not you, an happy year. Dryd.

2. Kindly; with unasked kindness.

Let thy goats officiously be nurs'd,
And led to living streams to quench their thirst. Dryden.

OFFICIOUSNESS. n. f. [from officious.]

1. Forwardness of civility, or respect, or endeavour. Commonly in an ill sense.

I shew my officiousness by an offering, though I betray my poverty by the measure. South.

19. Noting the manner of an event.

Note,
How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden.

20. On, the same with upon. See UPON.

ON, adv.

1. Forward; in succession.

As he forbore one act, so he might have forborn another, and after that another, and so on, till he had by degrees weakened, and at length mortified and extinguished the habit itself.

If the tenant fail the landlord, he must fail his creditor, and he his, and so on.

These smaller particles are again composed of others much smaller, all which together are equal to all the pores or empty spaces between them; and so on perpetually till you come to solid particles, such as have no pores.

2. Forward; in progression.

On indeed they went; but oh! not far;
A fatal stop travers'd their head-long course.

So saying, on he led his radiant files.
My hasting days fly on with full career.

Hopping and flying, thus they led him on to the slow lake.

What kindled in the dark the vital flame,
And ere the heart was form'd, push'd on the red'ning stream.

Go to, I did not mean to chide you;
On with your tale.

3. In continuance; without ceasing.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn.

Sing on, sing on, for I can ne'er be cloy'd.

You roam about, and never are at rest;
By new desires, that is, new torments still possess:

As in a sev'rish dream you still drink on,
And wonder why your thirst is never gone.

The peasants defy the sun; they work on in the hottest part of the day without intermission.

4. Not off; as, he is neither on nor off; that is, he is irresolute.

5. Upon the body, as part of drefs. His clothes were neither on nor off; they were disordered. See OFF.

A long cloak he had on.
Stiff in brocade, and pinch'd in stays,
Her patches, paint, and jewels on;
All day let envy view her face,
And Phillis is but twenty-one.

A painted vest prince Voltager had on,
Which from a naked Piët his grandfire won.

6. It notes resolution to advance forward; not backward.

Since 'tis decreed, and to this period lead
A thousand ways, the noblest path we'll tread;

And bravely on, till they or we, or all,
A common sacrifice to honour fall.

7. It is through almost all its significations opposed to off, and means approach, junction, addition, or presence.

ON, interject. A word of incitement or encouragement to attack; elliptically for to go on.

Therefore on, or strip your sword stark naked;
for meddle you must,

Cheerly on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace,
By this one bloody trial of sharp war.

On then, my muse! and fools and knaves expose,
And, since thou can'st not make a friend, make foes.

ONCE, adv. [from one.]

1. One time.

Trees that bear mast, are fruitful but once in two years;
the cause is, the expence of sap.

Forthwith from out the ark a raven flies,
And after him the surer messenger,
A dove, sent forth once and again to spy
Green trees or ground.

Once ev'ry morn he march'd, and once at night.

You came out like some great monarch, to take a town but once a year, as it were for your diversion, though you had no need to extend your territories.

O virgin! daughter of eternal night,
Give me this once thy labour to sustain
My right, and execute my just disdain.

In your tuneful lays,
Once more resound the great Apollo's praise.

2. A single time.

Who this heir is, he does not once tell us.

3. The same time.

At once with him they rose:
Their rising all at once was as the sound
Of thunder heard remote.

Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast,
And on the lips a burning kiss impress'd.

4. At a point of time indivisible.

Night came on, not by degrees prepar'd,
But all at once; at once the winds arise,
The thunders roll.

Now that the fixed stars, by reason of their immense distance, appear like points, unless so far as their light is dilated by refraction, may appear from hence, that when the moon passes over them and eclipses them, their light vanishes, not gradually like that of the planets, but all at once.

5. One time, though no more.

Fuscinus, those ill deeds that sully fame,
In blood once tainted, like a current run
From the lewd father to the lewder son.

6. At the time immediate.

This hath all its force at once, upon the first impression, and is ever afterwards in a declining state

7. Formerly; at a former time.

Thereon his arms and once-lov'd portrait lay, Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey.

My soul had once some foolish fondness for thee,
But hence 'tis gone.

8. Once seems to be rather a noun than an adverb, when it has at before it, and when it is joined with an adjective: as, this once, that once.

ONE, adj. [an, æne, Saxon; een, Dutch; ein, German; én, Greek.]

1. Less than two; single; denoted by an unit.

The man he knew was one that willingly,
For one good look would hazard all.

Pindarus the poet, and one of the wisest, acknowledged also one God the most high, to be the father and creator of all things.

Love him by parts in all your num'rous race,
And from those parts form one collected grace;
Then when you have refin'd to that degree,
Imagine all in one, and think that one is he.

2. Indefinitely, any; some one.

We shall

Present our services to a fine new prince,
One of these days. Shakspeare.
I took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other. Shakspeare.

3. It is added to any.

When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. Matthew.

If any one prince made a felicity in this life, and left fair fame after death, without the love of his subjects, there were some colour to despise it.
Suckling.

4. Different; diverse: opposed to another.

What a precious comfort to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes?
Shakspeare.

It is one thing to draw outlines true, the features like, the proportions exact, the colouring tolerable, and another thing to make all these graceful. Dryd.
Suppose the common depth of the sea, taking one place with another, to be about a quarter of a mile.
Burnet.

It is one thing to think right, and another thing to know the right way to lay our thoughts before others with advantage and clearness. Locke.

My legs were closed together by so many wrappers one over another, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy. Addison.

There can be no reason why we should prefer any one action to another, but because we have greater hopes of advantage from the one than from the other.
Smallridge.

Two bones rubbed hard against one another, or with a file, produce a fetid smell. Arbutnot.

At one time they keep their patients so warm, as almost to stifle them, and all of a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker.

5. One of two: opposed to the other.

Ask from the one side of heaven unto the other,
whether there hath been any such thing as this.
Deuteronomy.

Both the matter of the stone and marchasite; had been at once fluid bodies, till one of them, probably the marchasite, first growing hard, the other as being of a more yielding consistence, accommodated itself

6. Not many; the same.

The church is therefore one, though the members may be many; because they all agree in one faith.
There is one Lord and one faith, and that truth once delivered to the saints, which whosoever shall receive, embrace, and profess, must necessarily be accounted one in reference to that profession: for if a company of believers become a church by believing, they must also become one church by believing one truth.
Pearson.

7. Particularly one.

One day when Phœbe fair,
With all her band was following the chase,
This nymph quite tir'd with heat of scorching air,
Sat down to rest. Spenser.

One day, in turning some uncultur'd ground,
In hopes a free-stone quarry might be found,
His mattock met resistance, and behold,
A casket burst, with diamonds fill'd, and gold. Harte.

8. Some future.

Heav'n waxeth old, and all the spheres above
Shall one day faint, and their swift motion stay;
And time itself, in time shall cease to move,
But the soul survives and lives for aye. Davies.

ONE. n. s. [There are many uses of the word one, which serve to denominate it a substantive, though some of them may seem rather to make it a pronoun relative, and some may perhaps be considered as consistent with the nature of an adjective, the substantive being understood.]

1. A single person.

If one by one you wedded all the world,
She you kill'd would be unparallel'd. Shakspeare.
Although the beauties, riches, honours, sciences, virtues, and perfections of all men were in the present possession of one, yet somewhat beyond and above all this there would still be sought and earnestly thirsted for. Hooker.

From his lofty steed he flew,

And raising one by one the suppliant crew,
To comfort each. Dryden.
If one must be rejected, one succeed,
Make him my lord, within whose faithful breast
Is fix'd my image, and who loves me best. Dryden.
When join'd in one, the good, the fair, the great,
Descends to view the mutes' humble seat.
Granville.

2. A single mass or aggregate.

It is one thing only as a heap is one. Blackmore.

3. The first hour.

Till 'tis one o'clock, our dance of custom
Let us not forget. Shakspeare.

4. The same thing.

I answer'd not again:
But that's all one. Shakspeare.

To be in the understanding, and not to be understood, is all one, as to say any thing is, and is not in the understanding. Locke.

5. A person, indefinitely and loose.

A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one in ranging human affairs. Watts.

6. A person, by way of eminence.

Ferdinand
My father, king of Spain, was reckoned one,
The wisest prince that there had reign'd. Shakspeare.

7. A distinct or particular person.

That man should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another. Bacon.
No nations are wholly aliens and strangers the one to the other. Bacon.

The obedience of the one to the call of grace, when the other, supposed to have sufficient, if not an equal measure, obeys not, may reasonably be imputed to the humble, malleable, melting temper.
Hammond.

One or other sees a little box which was carried away with her, and so discovers her to her friends.
Dryden.

8. Persons united.

As I have made ye one; lords, one remain:
So I grow stronger, you more honour gain.
Shakspeare.

9. Concord; agreement; one mind.

The king was well instructed how to carry himself between Ferdinando and Philip, resolving to keep them at one within themselves. Bacon.
He is not at one with himself what account to give of it. Tillotson.

10. [On, l'on, French. It is used sometimes as a general or indefinite nominative for any man, any person. For one the English formerly used men; as, they live obscurely, men know not how; or die ob-scurely, men mark not when. Ascham.
For which it would now be said, one knows not how, one knows not when;
or, it is not known how.] Any person;
any man indefinitely.

It is not so worthy to be brought to heroical effects by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney.

One may be little the wiser for reading this dialogue, since it neither sets forth what Erone is, nor what the cause should be which threatens her with death. Sidney.

One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease, affluence and power; not of one who had been just stripped of all those advantages. Atterbury.

For provoking of urine, one should begin with the gentlest first. Arbutnot.

For some time one was not thought to understand Aristotle, unless he had read him with Averroë's comment. Baker.

11. A person of particular character.

Then must you speak
Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well;
Of one not easily jealous; but being wrought
Perplex'd in the extreme. Shakspeare.

With lives and fortunes trusting one
Who so discreetly us'd his own. Waller.

Edward I. was one who very well knew how to use a victory, as well as obtain it. Hale.

One who condemn'd divine and human laws.
Dryden.

Forgive me, if that title I afford

To one, whom Nature meant to be a lord. Hart- 12. One has sometimes a plural, either whe-it stands for persons indefinitely; as, the great ones of the world: or when it relate to some thing going before, and is onl
the representative of the antecedent noun.
This relative mode of speech, whethe singular, or plural, is in my ear, not ver elegant, yet is used by good authors.
Be not found here; hence with your little ones.
Shakspeare.

Does the son receive a natural life? The subject enjoys a civil one: that's but the matter, this is the form. Holiday.

These successes are more glorious which bring benefit to the world, than such ruinous ones as are dyed in human blood. Glanville.

He that will overlook the true reason of a thing which is but one, may easily find many false ones, error being infinite. Tillotson.

The following plain rules and directions, are not the less useful because they are plain ones. Atterbury.

There are many whose waking thoughts are wholly employed on their sleeping ones. Addison.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority limited by law.
Addison.

This evil fortune which attends extraordinary men, hath been imputed to divers causes that need not be set down, when so obvious an one occurs, that when a great genius appears, the dunces are all in conspiracy against him. Swift.

13. One another, is a mode of speech very frequent; as, they love one another; that is, one of them loves another: the storm beats the trees against one another; that is, one against another.

In democratical governments, war did commonly unite the minds of men; when they had enemies abroad, they did not contend with one another at home. Davenant.

ONE berry. n. s. [acacitum, Latin.] Wolfsbane.

O'NEEYED. adj. [one and eye.] Having only one eye.

The oneey'd heroe on his elephant. Dryden.

The mighty family
Of oneey'd brothers hasten to the shore. Addison.

ONEIROCRITICAL. adj. [ὄνειρος, Gr.
oneirocritique, Fr. it should therefore according to analogy be written onirocritical and onirocritick.] Interpretative of dreams.

If a man has no mind to pass by abruptly from his imagined to his real circumstances, he may employ himself in that new kind of observation which oneirocritical correspondent has directed him to make. Addison.

ONEIROCRITICK. n. s. [ὄνειρος, Gr.]
An interpreter of dreams.

Having surveyed all ranks and professions, I not find in any quarter of the town an oneirocritic, or an interpreter of dreams. Addison.

O'NEENESS. n. s. [from one.] Unity; the quality of being one.

Our God is one, or rather very oneness and mere unity, having nothing but itself in itself, and not consisting, as all things do besides God, of many things. Hooker.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases, is the one eternal indivisible divine nature, and the eternity of the son's generation, and his co-eternity, and his consubstantiality with the Father when he came down from heaven and was incarnate. Hammond.

O'NERARY. adj. [onerarius, Lat. oneraire,

His generous, open, undesigning heart,
Has begg'd his rival to solicit for him. Addison.

4. Not clouded; clear.

With dry eyes, and with an open look,
She met his glance midway. Dryden.

Then shall thy Craggs
On the east ore another Pollio shine;
With aspect open shall erect his head. Pope.

5. Not hidden; exposed to view.

In that little spot of ground that lies between those two great oceans of eternity, we are to exercise our thoughts, and lay open the treasures of the divine wisdom and goodness hid in this part of nature and providence. Burnet.

Moral principles require reasoning and discourse to discover the certainty of their truths: they lie not open as natural characters engraven on the mind.
Locke.

6. Not restrained; not denied; not precluded.

If Demetrius and the craftsmen have a matter against any man, the law is open, and there are deputies; let them implead one another. Acts.

7. Not cloudy; not gloomy.

An open and warm winter portendeth a hot and dry summer. Bacon.

8. Uncovered.

Here is better than the open air. Shakspeare.
And when at last in pity, you will die,
I'll watch your birth of immortality;
Then, turtle-like, I'll to my mate repair;
And teach you your first flight in open air. Dryden.

9. Exposed; without defence.

The service that I truly did his life,
Hath left me open to all injuries. Shakspeare.

10. Attentive.

Thine eyes are open upon all the sons of men, to give every one according to his ways. Jeremiab.

The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry. Psalms.

- O'PENER. n. s. [from open.]

1. One that opens; one that unlocks; one that unclofes.

True opener of mine eyes,
Much better seems this vision, and more hope
Of peaceful days portends, than those two past.
Milton.

2. Explainer; interpreter.

To us, th' imagin'd voice of heav'n itself;
The very opener and intelligencer
Between the grace, the sanctities of heav'n,
And our dull workings. Shakspeare

3. That which separates; disuniter.

There may be such openers of compound bodies, because there wanted not some experiments in which it appeared. Boyle.

- OPENEYED. adj. [open and eye.] Vigilant; watchful.

While you here do snoring lie,
Openeyed conspiracy
His time doth take. Shakspeare.

- OPENH'ANDED. adj. [open and hand.]
Generous; liberal; munificent.

Good heav'n who renders mercy back for mercy,
With openhanded bounty shall repay you. Rowe.

- OPENHEARTED. adj. [open and heart.]
Generous; candid; not meanly subtle.

I know him well; he's free and openhearted.
Dryden.

Of an openhearted generous minister you are not to say that he was in an intrigue to betray his country;
but in an intrigue with a lady. Arbutnot.

- OPENHEARTEDNESS. n. s. [open and heart.] Liberality; frankness; sincerity;
munificence; generosity.

- O'PENING. n. s. [from open.]

cracks and openings of the earth. Woodward.

2. Discovery at a distance; faint knowledge; dawn.

God has been pleased to dissipate this confusion and chaos, and to give us some openings, some dawnings of liberty and settlement. South.

The opening of your glory was like that of light;
you shone to us from afar, and disclosed your first beams on distant nations. Dryden.

- O'PENLY. adv. [from open.]

1. Publickly; not secretly; in sight; not obscurely.

Their actions always spoke of with great honour, are now called openly into question. Hooker.

Prayers are faulty, not whensoever they be openly made, but when hypocrisy is the cause of open praying. Hooker.

Why should you have put me to deny
This claim which now you wear so openly. Shaks.

I knew the time,
Now full, that I no more shall live obscure,
But openly begin, as best becomes

The authority which I deriv'd from heav'n. Milton.

How grossly and openly do many of us contradict the precepts of the gospel, by our ungodliness and worldly lusts. Tillotson.

We express our thanks by openly owning our parentage, and paying our common devotions to God on this day's solemnity. Atterbury.

2. Plainly; apparently; evidently; without disguise.

Too openly does love and hatred show,
A bounteous master, but a deadly foe. Dryden.

- OPENMOUTHED. adj. [open and mouth.]
Greedy; ravenous; clamorous; vociferous.

Up comes a lion openmouthed towards the ass.
L'Estrange.

- O'PENNESS. n. s. [from open.]

1. Plainness; clearness; freedom from obscurity or ambiguity.

Deliver with more openness your answers
To my demands. Shakspeare.

2. Plainness; freedom from disguise.

The noble openness and freedom of his reflexions, are expressed in lively colours. Felton.

These letters all written in the openness of friendship, will prove what were my real sentiments. Pope.

You will hear what plays were acted that week, which is the finest song in the opera. Larv.

OPERABLE. adj. [from operor, Lat.] To be done; practicable. Not in use.

Being incapable of operable circumstances, or rightly to judge the prudentiality of affairs, they only gaze upon the visible success, and thereafter condemn or cry up the whole progression. Brown.

OPERANT. adj. [operant, Fr.] Active; having power to produce any effect. Not in use, though elegant.

Earth, yield me roots;
 Who seeks far better of thee, sauce his palate
 With thy most operant poison. Shakspeare.

I must leave thee, love, and shortly too;
 My operant powers their functions leave to do. Shak.

OPERATE. v. n. [operor, Lat. operer, Fr.] To act; to have agency; to produce effects: with on before the subject of operation.

The virtues of private persons operate but on a few; their sphere of action is narrow, and their influence is confined to it. Atterbury.

Bodies produce ideas in us, manifestly by impulse, the only way which we can conceive bodies operate in. Locke.

I can operate on the guts and stomach, and thereby produce distinct ideas. Locke.

A plain convincing reason operates on the mind, both of a learned and ignorant hearer as long as they live. Swift.

Where causes operate freely, with a liberty of indifference to this or the contrary, the effect will be contingent, and the certain knowledge of it belongs only to God. Watts.

OPERATION. n. f. [operatio, Lat. operation, Fr.]

1. Agency; production of effects; influence.

There are in men operations, natural, rational, supernatural, some politick, some finally ecclesiastical. Hooker.

By all the operations of the orbs,
 From whom we do exist and cease to be,
 Here I disclaim all my paternal care. Shakspeare.

All operations by transmutation of spirits, and imagination, work at distance, and not at touch. Bacon.

Waller's preference had an extraordinary operation to procure any thing desired. Clarendon.

The tree whose operation brings Knowledge of good and ill, shun to taste. Milton.

If the operation of these salts be in convenient glasses promoted, the ascending steams may easily be caught and reduced into a penetrant spirit. Boyle.

Speculative painting, without the assistance of manual operations, can never attain to perfection, but slothfully languishes; for it was not with his tongue that Apelles performed his noble works. Dryden.

The pain and sickness caused by manna, are the effects of its operation on the stomach and guts by the fire, motion, and figure of its insensible parts. Locke.

2. Action; effect with the form. His is often confounded with the form. Repentance and renovation consist not in the strife, with, or purpose, but in the actual operations of good life. Hammond.

Many medicinal drugs are of rare operation. Heylin.

Far other operation than that first carnal desire inflaming, life fruit display'd, Milton.

The offices appointed to the church, by their institution and operation are holy. Pearson.

In this under-standi- ing piece of clock-work, his body as well as other senseless matter has colour, warmth and so fitness. But these qualities are not substant in the life bodies, begotten in something else. Bentley.

Vol. II.

3. [In chirurgery.] That part of the art of healing which depends on the use of instruments.

4. The motions or employments of an army.

OPERATIVE. adj. [from operate.] Having the power of acting; having forcible agency; active; vigorous; efficacious.

To be over curious in searching how God's all-piercing and operative spirit distinguishing gave form to the matter of the universal, is a search like unto his, who not contented with a known ford, will presume to pass over the greatest rivers in all parts where he is ignorant of their depths. Raleigh.

Many of the nobility endeavoured to make themselves popular, by speaking in parliament against those things which were most grateful to his majesty; and he thought a little discountenance upon those persons would suppress that spirit within themselves, or make the poison of it less operative upon others. Clarendon.

In actions of religion we should be zealous, active, and operative, so far as prudence will permit. Taylor.

This circumstance of the promise must give life to all the rest, and make them operative toward the producing of good life. Decay of Piety.

It holds in all operative principles, especially in morality; in which, not to proceed, is certainly to go backward. South.

The will is the conclusion of an operative syllogism. Norris.

OPERA'TOR. n. f. [opérateur, French; from operate.] One that performs any act of the hand; one who produces any effect.

An imaginary operator opening the first with a great deal of nicety, upon a cursory view it appeared like the head of another. Addison.

To administer this dose, there cannot be fewer than fifty thousand operators, allowing one operator to every thirty. Swift.

OPEROSE. adj. [operosus, Lat.] Laborious; full of trouble and tediousness.

Such an explication is purely imaginary, and also very operose, they would be as hard put to it to get rid of this water, when the deluge was to cease, as they were first to procure it. Burnet.

Written language, as it is more operous, so it is more digested, and is permanent. Holder.

OPHIO'PHAGOUS. adj. [ὄφις and φάγω.] Serpenteating. Not used.

All snakes are not of such poisonous qualities as common opinion presumeth; as is confirmable from ophiophagus nations, and such as feed upon serpents. Brown.

OPHI'TES. n. f. A stone resembling a serpent.

Ophites has a dusky greenish ground, with spots of a lighter green, oblong, and usually near square. Woodward.

The use of cool applications, externally, is most easy to the eye; but after all, there will sometimes ensue a troublesome ophthalmy. Sharp.

OPIATE. n. f. A medicine that causes sleep.

They chose atheism as an opiate, to still those frightening apprehensions of hell, by inducing a dulness and lethargy of mind, rather than to make use of that native and salutary medicine, a hearty repentance. Bentley.

Thy thoughts and music change with every line; No sameness of a prattling stream is thine, Which with one unison of murmur flows, Opiate of inattention and repose. Harte.

OPIATE. adj. Soporiferous; somniferous; narcotick; causing sleep.

The particular ingredients of those magical ointments, are opiate and soporiferous. For anointing of the forehead and back bone, is used for procuring dead sleeps. Bacon.

All their shape
 Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those
 Of Argus, and more wakeful than to drouze, Charm'd with Arcadian pipe, the past'ral reed
 Of Hermes, or his opiate rod. Milton.

Lettuce, which has a milky juice with an anodyne or opiate quality resolvent of the bile, is proper for melancholy. Arbutnot.

OPIFICE. n. f. [opificium, Lat.] Workmanship; handiwork. Diät.

OPIFICER. n. f. [opifex, Latin.] One that performs any work; artist. A word not received.

There is an infinite distance betwixt the poor mortal artist, and the almighty opificer. Bentley.

OPINABLE. adj. [opinor, Latin.] Which may be thought. Diät.

OPINA'TION. n. f. [opinor, Lat.] Opinion; notion. Diät.

OPINA'TOR. n. f. [opinor, Lat.] One who holds an opinion.

Consider against what kind of opinators the reason above given is levelled. Hale.

TO OPINE. v. n. [opinor, Lat.] To think; to judge; to be of opinion.

Fear is an ague, that forsakes
 And haunts by fits those whom it takes;
 And they'll opine they feel the pain
 And blows they felt to-day, again. Hudibras.

In matters of mere speculation, it is not material to the welfare of government, or themselves, whether they opine right or wrong, and whether they be philosophers or no. South.

But I, who think more highly of our kind,
Opine, that nature, as in duty bound,
 Deep hid the shining mischief under ground. Pope.

OPINIATIVE. adj. [from opinion.]

1. Stiff in a preconceived notion.

2. Imagined; not proved.

It is difficult to find out truth, because it is in such inconsiderable proportions scattered in a mass of opiniative uncertainties; like the silver in Hiero's crown of gold. Glanville.

OPINIATOR. n. f. [opiniatre, Fr.] One fond of his own notion; inflexible; adherent to his own opinion.

What will not opiniators and self-believing men dispute of and make doubt of? Raleigh.

Essex left lord Roberts governour; a man of a sour and surly nature, a great opiniator, and one who must be overcome before he would believe that he could be so. Clarendon.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition; as it is pity but all such politick opiniators should. South.

OPINIATRE. adj. [French] Obstinate; stubborn; inflexible.

Instead of an able man, you desire to have him an insignificant wrangler, opiniatre in discourse, and priding himself in contradicting others. Locke.

OPINIATRETY. } n. f. [opiniatreté, Fr.]

OPINIATRY. } Obstinacy; inflexibility; determination of mind; stubbornness. This word, though it has been tried in different forms, is not yet received, nor is it wanted.

Left popular opiniatry should arise, we will deliver the chief opinions. Brown.

The one sets the thoughts upon wit and false colours, and not upon truth; the other teaches fallacy, wrangling and opiniatrey. Locke.

So much as we ourselves comprehend of truth and reason, so much we possess of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains, makes us not one jot the more knowing.

though they happen to be true: what in them was science, is in us but opiniatry. Locke.

I can pass by opiniatry, and the busy meddling of those who thrust themselves into every thing. Woodward's Letters.

I was extremely concerned at his opiniatry in leaving me: but he shall not get rid so. Pope.

OPINION. n. f. [opinion, French; opinio, Latin.]

1. Persuasion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge.

Opinion is a light, vain, crude, and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination, but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. Ben Jonson.

Opinion is, when the assent of the understanding is so far gained by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one persuasion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of uncertainty or doubting. Hale.

Time wears out the fictions of opinion, and doth by degrees discover and unmask that fallacy of ungrounded persuasions; but confirms the dictates and sentiments of nature. Wilkins.

Blest be the princes who have fought
For pompous names, or wide dominion,
Since by their error we are taught,
That happiness is but opinion. Prior.

2. Sentiments; judgment; notion.

Where no such settled custom hath made it law, there it hath force only according to the strength of reason and circumstances joined with it, or as it shews the opinion and judgment of them that made it; but not at all as if it had any commanding power of obedience. Selden.

Can they make it out against the common sense and opinion of all mankind, that there is no such thing as a future state of misery for such as have lived ill here? South.

Charity itself commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all; but friendship, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend. South.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning heirs, that where there are divers children the eldest son has the right to be heir. Locke.

Philosophers are of opinion, that infinite space is possessed by God's infinite omnipresence. Locke.

A story out of Boccacini sufficiently shews us the opinion that judicious author entertained of the critics. Addison.

3. Favourable judgment.

In actions of arms small matters are of great moment, especially when they serve to raise an opinion of commanders. Hayward.

Howsoever I have no opinion of those things; yet so much I conceive to be true, that strong imagination hath more force upon things living, than things merely inanimate. Bacon.

If a woman had no opinion of her own person and dress, she would never be angry at those who are of the opinion with herself. Laro.

TO OPINION. v. a. [from the noun.] To opine; to think. A word out of use, and unworthy of revival.

The Stoicks opinioned the souls of wise men dwell about the moon, and those of fools wandered about the earth: whereas the Epicureans held nothing after death. Brown.

That the soul and the angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, is generally opinioned. Glanville.

OPINIONATIVE. adj. [from opinion.] Fond of preconceived notions; stubborn.

Striking at the root of pedantry and opinionative assurance, would be no hindrance to the world's improvement. Glanville.

One would rather chuse a reader, without art, than one ill instructed with learning, but opinionative and without judgment. Burnet.

OPINIONATIVELY. adv. [from opinionative.] Stubbornly.

OPINIONATIVENESS. n. f. [from opinionative.] Obstinacy.

OPINIONIST. n. f. [opinioniste, Fr. opinion.] One fond of his own notions.

OPIPAROUS. adj. [opiparus, Lat.] Sump-tuous. DiA.

OP'PIUM. n. f. A juice, partly of the resinous, partly of the gummy kind; brought to us in flat cakes or masses very heavy and of a dense texture, not perfectly dry: its colour is a dark brownish yellow; its smell is of a dead faint kind; and its taste very bitter and very acrid.

It is brought from Natolia, Egypt, and the East-Indies, produced from the white garden poppy; with which the fields of Asia-Minor are in many places sown. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet soft, green, and full of juice, incisions are made in them, and from every one of these a few drops flow of a milky juice, which soon hardens into a solid consistence. The finest opium proceeds from the first incisions. What we generally have is the mere crude juice, worked up with water, or honey sufficient to bring it into form. Externally applied it is emollient, relaxing and discutient, and greatly promotes suppuration. A moderate dose of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet custom will make people bear a dram, but in that case nature is vitiated. Its first effect is the making the patient cheerful; it removes melancholy, and dissipates the dread of danger; the Turks always take it when they are going to battle: it afterwards quiets the spirits, eases pain, and disposes to sleep. After the effect is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the spirits become lower than before, and the pulse languid. An immoderate dose of opium brings on drunkenness, cheerfulness, and loud laughter, at first, and, after many terrible symptoms, death itself. Those who have accustomed themselves to an immoderate use of opium, are apt to be faint, idle, and thoughtless; they lose their appetite, and grow old before their time. Hill.

Sleep hath forsok and giv'n me o'er
To death's benumbing opium as my only cure. Milt.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporifick or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies. Locke.

O'PLE-TREE. n. f. [opulus, ople, and tree.] A sort of tree. Ainsw.

OPOBA'LSAMUM. n. f. [Latin.] Balm of Gilead.

OPO'PONAX. n. f. [Latin.] A gum resin in small loose granules, and sometimes in large masses, of a strong disagreeable smell, and an acrid and extremely bitter taste; brought to us from the East, and known to the Greeks; but we are entirely ignorant of the plant which produces this drug. Hill.

O'PPIDAN. n. f. [oppidanus, Lat.] A townsman; an inhabitant of a town.

TO O'PPI'GNERATE. v. a. [oppignero, Lat.] To pledge; to pawn. Not in use.

The duke of Guise Henry was the greatest usurer in France, for that he had turned all his estate into obligations; meaning that he had sold and oppignorated all his patrimony, to give large donatives to other men. Bacon.

Ferdinando merchanted with France, for the restoring Roussillon and Perpignan, oppignorated to them. Bacon.

TO O'PPILATE. v. a. [oppilo, Lat. oppiler, Fr.] To heap up obstruction.

OPPI'LATI'ON. n. f. [oppilation, Fr. from oppilate.] Obstruction; matter heaped together.

The ingredients prescribed in their substance actuate the spirits, reclude oppilations, and mundify the blood. Harvey.

O'PPILATIVE. adj. [oppilative, Fr.] Obstructive.

OPPLE'TED. adj. [oppletus, Lat.] Filled; crowded.

OPPO'NENT. n. f. [opponens, Lat.] Opposite; adverse.

Ere the foundations of this earth were laid,
It was opponent to our search ordain'd,
That joy still sought, should never be attain'd. Prior.

OPPO'NENT. n. f. [opponens, Latin.]

1. Antagonist; adversary.
2. One who begins the dispute by raising objections to a tenet: correlative to the defendant or respondent.

Inasmuch as ye go about to destroy a thing which is in force, and to draw in that which hath not as yet been received, to impose on us that which we think not ourselves bound unto; that therefore ye are not to claim in any conference other than the plaintiffs or opponents part. Hooker.

How becomingly does Philopolis exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator. More.

OPPORTU'NE. adj. [opportune, Fr. opportunus, Lat.] Seasonable; convenient; fit; timely; well-timed; proper.

There was nothing to be added to this great king's felicity, being at the top of all worldly bliss, and the perpetual constancy of his prosperous successes, but an opportune death to withdraw him from any future blow of fortune. Bacon.

Will lift us up in spite of fate,
Nearer our ancient seat; perhaps in view
Of those bright confines, whence with neigh'ring arms

And opportune excursion, we may chance
Re-enter heav'n. Milton.

Consider'd every creature, which of all
Most opportune might serve his wiles; and found
The serpent subtlest beast of all the field. Milton.

OPPORTU'NELY. adv. [from opportune.] Seasonably; conveniently; with opportunity either of time or place.

He was resolved to chuse a war rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being situate so opportune to annoy England either for coast or trade. Bacon's Henry VII.

Against these there is a proper objection, that they offend uniformity, whereof I am therefore opportune induced to say somewhat. Wotton.

The experiment does opportune supply the deficiency. Boyle.

OPPORTU'NITY. n. f. [opportunité, Fr. opportunitas, Lat.] Fit time; fit place; time; convenience; suitability of circumstances to any end.

A wise man will make more opportunities than he finds. Men's behaviour should be like their apparel, not too straight, but free for exercise. Bacon.

Opportunity, like a sudden gust,
Hath swell'd my calmer thoughts into a tempest.
Accursed opportunity!

That work'd our thoughts into desires, desires
To resolutions; those being ripe and quicken'd, Thou giv'st them birth, and bring'st them forth to action. Denham.

Tho' their advice be good, their counsel wise,
Yet length still loses opportunities. Denham.

I had an opportunity to see the cloud descend, and after it was past, to ascend again so high as to get over part of the mountain. Brown's Travels.

Neglect no opportunity of doing good, nor check thy desire of doing it, by a vain fear of what may happen. Atterbury.

All poets have taken an opportunity to give long descriptions of the night. Broom.

TO O'PPO'SE. v. a. [opposer, Fr. oppono, Latin.]

1. To act against; to be adverse; to hinder; to resist.

There's no bottom, none
In my voluptuousness: and my desire
All continent impediments wou'd o'erbear,
That did oppose my will. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. To put in opposition; to offer as an antagonist or rival.

If all men are not naturally equal, I am sure all slaves are; and then I may, without presumption, oppose my single opinion to his. Locke.

3. To place as an obstacle.

Since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury. Shakspeare.

I thro' the seas pursu'd their exil'd race,
Engag'd the heav'n's, oppos'd the stormy main;
But billows roar'd and tempests rag'd in vain. Dryd.

4. To place in front; to place over against.

Her grace sat down
In a rich chair of state; opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people. Shakspeare.

OPPOSE. v. n.

1. To act adversely.

A servant, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master. Shakspeare's King Lear.

He practised to dispatch such of the nobility as were like to oppose against his mischievous drift, and in such sort to encumber and weaken the rest, that they should be no impediments to him. Hayward.

2. To object in a disputation; to have the part of raising difficulties against a tenet supposed to be right.

OPPOSELESS. adj. [from oppose.] Irresistible; not to be opposed.

I could bear it longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your great opposeless wills. Shakspeare.

OPPOSER. n. s. [from oppose.] One that opposes; antagonist; enemy; rival.

Now the fair goddess fortune
Fall deep in love with thee, and her great charms
Misguide thy opposers' swords: bold gentleman!

Brave wits that have made essays worthy of immortality; yet by reason of envious and more popular opposers, have submitted to fate, and are almost lost in oblivion. Glanville.

I do not see how the ministers could have continued in their stations, if their opposers had agreed about the methods by which they should be ruined. Swift.

A hardy modern chief,
A bold opposer of divine belief. Blackmore.

OPPOSITE. adj. [from opposite, Fr. oppositus, Latin.]

1. Placed in front; facing each other.

To th' other five,
Their planetary motions and aspects,
In sextile, square, trine and opposite,
Of various efficacy. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Adversary; repugnant.

Nothing of a foreign nature, like the trifling novels, by which the reader is misled into another sort of pleasure, or in an epic poem.
This is a profound and uneasy to the lusts and passions, and opposite to the strongest desires of flesh and blood. Rogers.

3. Contrary.

In this fallen state of man religion begins with repentance and conversion, the two opposite terms of which are God and sin. Tillotson.

Particles of speech have divers, and sometimes almost opposite significations. Locke.

OPPOSITE. n. An adversary; opponent;

antagonist; enemy. A

To the best and wisest, while they live, the world is continually a forward, opposite, a curious observer of their defects and imperfections; their virtues it admires and imitates. Hooker.

He is the most skillful, bloody, and fatal opposer
found in Illyria. Shakspeare.

He is the most skillful, bloody, and fatal opposer
found in Illyria. Shakspeare.

OPPOSITE. adv. [from opposite.] In such a situation as to face each other.

The lesser pair oppositely with their points are joined edge to edge, but not points downward, but upward. Grew.

2. Adversely.

I oft have seen, when corn was ripe to mow,
And now in dry, and brittle straw did grow,
Winds from all quarters oppositely blow. May.

O'PPOSITENESS. n. s. [from opposite.] The state of being opposite.

OPPOSITION. n. s. [from opposition, Fr. oppositio, Latin.]

1. Situation so as to front something opposed; standing over against.

2. Hostile resistance.

He
Cry'd Oh! and mounted; found no opposition
From what he look'd for should oppose. Shakspeare.

Virtue which breaks thro' opposition,
And all temptation can remove,
Most shines, and most is acceptable above. Milton.

He considers Lausus rescuing his father at the hazard of his own life, as an image of himself when he took Anchises on his shoulders, and bore him safe through the rage of the fire and the opposition of his enemies. Dryden.

3. Contrariety of affection.

They who never tried the experiment of a holy life, measure the laws of God not by their intrinsic goodness, but by the reluctance and opposition which they find in their own hearts. Tillotson.

4. Contrariety of interest; contrariety of measures.

When the church is taken for the persons making profession of the christian faith, the catholic is often added in opposition to hereticks and schismatics. Pearson.

5. Contrariety of meaning; diversity of meaning.

The parts of every true opposition do always both concern the same subject, and have reference to the same thing, with otherwise they are but in shew opposite, not in truth. Hooker.

The use of language and custom of speech, in all authors I have met with, has gone upon this rule, or maxim, that exclusive terms are always to be understood in opposition only to what they are opposed to, and not in opposition to what they are not opposed to. Waterland.

6. Inconsistency.

Reason can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence to embrace what is less evident, nor allow it to entertain probability in opposition to knowledge and certainty. Locke.

To O'PPRESS. v. a. [from oppressus, Latin.]

1. To crush by hardship or unreasonable severity.

Israel and Judah were oppressed together, and all that took them captives held them fast, they refused to let them go. Jeremiah.

Alas! a mortal most oppress'd of those Whom fate has loaded with a weight of woes. Pope.

2. To overpower; to subdue.

We're not ourselves,
When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body. Shakspeare.

In blazing height of noon,
The sun oppress'd, is plunged in thickest gloom. Thomson.

OPPRESSION. n. s. [from oppression, Fr. from oppress.]

1. The act of oppressing; cruelty; severity.

If thou seest the oppressions of the poor, marvel not at the matter, for he that is higher than the highest regardeth. Ecclesiastes.

2. The state of being oppressed; misery.

Famine is in thy cheeks;
Need and oppression stare within thine eyes,
Contempt and beggary hang upon thy back. Shakspeare.

Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. Shakspeare.

3. Hardship; calamity.

We are all subject to the same accidents; and when we see any under particular oppression, we should look upon it as the common lot of human nature. Addison.

4. Dulness of spirits; lassitude of body.

Drowsiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbutnot.

OPPRESSIVE. adj. [from oppress.]

1. Cruel; inhuman; unjustly exacting or severe.

2. Heavy; overwhelming.

Alicia, reach thy friendly arm,
And help me to support that feeble frame,
That nodding totters with oppressive woe,
And sinks beneath its load. Roxe.

To ease the soul of one oppressive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a state. Pope.

OPPRESSOR. n. s. [from oppressor, Fr. from oppress.] One who harasses others with unreasonable or unjust severity.

I from oppressors did the poor defend,
The fatherless, and such as had no friend. Sandys.

The cries of orphans, and th' oppressor's rage,
Had reach'd the stars. Dryden.

Power when employed to relieve the oppressed,
and to punish the oppressor, becomes a great blessing. Swift.

OPPROBRIOUS. adj. [from opprobrium, Latin.]

1. Reproachful; disgraceful; causing infamy; scurrilous.

Himself pronounceth them blessed, that should for his name sake be subject to all kinds of ignominy and opprobrious malediction. Hooker.

They see themselves unjustly aspersed, and vindicate themselves in terms no less opprobrious than those by which they are attacked. Addison.

2. Blasted with infamy.

I will not here defile
My unstain'd verse with his opprobrious name. Daniel.

Solomon he led by fraud to build
His temple right against the temple of God,
On the opprobrious hill. Milton.

OPPROBRIOUSLY. adv. [from opprobrious.] Reproachfully; scurrilously.

Think you, this little prating York
Was not incensed by his subtle mother,
To taunt and scorn you thus opprobriously? Shakspeare.

OPPROBRIOUSNESS. n. s. [from opprobrious.] Reproachfulness; scurrility.

To OPPUGN. v. a. [from oppugno, Latin.] To oppose; to attack; to resist.

For the ecclesiastical laws of this land we are led by a great reason to observe, and ye be by no necessity bound to oppugn them. Hooker.

They said the manner of their impeachment they could not but conceive did oppugn the rights of parliament. Clarendon.

If nothing can oppugn his love,
And virtue envious ways can prove,
What cannot he confide to do
That brings both love and virtue too? Hudibras.

The ingredients reclude oppulations, mundify the blood, and oppugn putrefaction. Harvey.

OPPUGNER. n. s. [from oppugn.] Opposition.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows, each thing meets
In meer oppugnaney. Shakspeare.

OPPUGNANCY. n. s. [from oppugn.] One who opposes or attacks.

The modern and degenerate Jews be, upon the score of being the great patrons of man's free will, not causelessly esteemed the great oppugners of God's free grace. Boyle.

O'PTICAL. adj. [from opticus.] Relating to the science of opticks.

It seems not agreeable to what anatomists and optical writers deliver, touching the relation of the two eyes to each other. Boyle.

OPTICIAN. n. s. [from optick.] One skilled in opticks.

O'PTICK. adj. [ὀπτικὸς; optique, Fr.]

1. Visual; producing vision; subservient to vision.

May not the harmony and discord of colours arise from the proportions of the vibrations propagated through the fibres of the optick nerves into the brain, as the harmony and discord of sounds arise from the proportions of the vibrations of the air? Newton.

2. Relating to the science of vision.

Where our master handleth the contractions of pillars, we have an optick rule, that the higher they are, the less should be always their diminution aloft, because the eye itself doth contract all objects, according to the distance. Wotton.

O'PTICK. n. s. An instrument of sight; an organ of sight.

Can any thing escape the perspicacity of eyes which were before light, and in whose opticks there is no opacity? Brown.

Our corporeal eyes we find,
Dazzle the opticks of our mind. Denham.

You may neglect, or quench, or hate the flame,
Whose smoke too long obscur'd your rising name,
And quickly cold indiff'rence will ensue,
When you love's joys thro' honour's optick view. Prior.

Why has not man a microscopick eye?
For this plain reason, man is not a fly.
Say what the use, were finer opticks giv'n,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n? Pope.

O'PTICKS. n. s. [ὀπτικαί.] The science of the nature and laws of vision.

No spherical body of what bigness soever illuminates the whole sphere of another, although it illuminate something more than half of a lesser, according unto the doctrine of opticks. Brown.
Those who desire satisfaction must go to the admirable treatise of opticks by sir Isaac Newton. Cheyne.

O'PTIMACY. n. s. [optimates, Lat.] Nobility; body of nobles.

OPTIMITY. n. s. [from optimus.] The state of being best.

O'PTION. n. s. [optio, Lat.] Choice; election; power of choosing.

He decrees to punish the contumacy finally, by assigning them their own options. Hammond.
Transplantation must proceed from the option of the people, else it sounds like an exile; so the colonies must be raised by the leave of the king, and not by his command. Bacon.
Which of these two rewards we will receive, he hath left to our option. Smallridge.

O'PULENCE. n. s. [opulence, Fr. opulencia, Latin.] Wealth; riches; affluence.

It must be a discovery of the infinite flatteries that follow youth and opulency. Shakspeare.

After eight years spent in outward opulency and inward murmur, that it was not greater; after vast sums of money and great wealth gotten, he died unlamented. Clarendon.

He had been a person not only of great opulency, but authority. Atterbury.

There in full opulence a banker dwelt,
Who all the joys and pangs of riches felt;
His side-board glitter'd with imagin'd plate,
And his proud fancy held a vast estate. Swift.

O'PULENT. adj. [opulent, Fr. opulentus, Lat.] Rich; wealthy; affluent.

He made him his ally, and provoked a mighty and opulent king by an offensive war in his quarrel. Bacon.

To begin with the supposed policy of gratifying only the rich and opulent:—does our wise man think that the grandee whom he courts does not see through all the little plots of his courtship? South.

O'PULENTLY. adv. [from opulent.] Richly; with splendour.

OR. conjunct. [oðen, Saxon.]

1. A disjunctive particle, marking distribution, and sometimes opposition.

Inquire what the antients thought concerning this world, whether it was to perish or no; whether to be destroyed or to stand eternally? Burnet.

He my muse's homage should receive,
If I cou'd write, or Holles could forgive. Garth.

By intense study, or application to business that requires little action, the digestion of foods will soon proceed more slowly, and with more uneasiness. Blackmore.

Every thing that can be divided by the mind into two or more ideas, is called complex. Watts.

2. It corresponds to either: he must either fall or fly.

At Venice you may go to any house either by land or water. Addison.

3. It sometimes, but rather inelegantly, stands for either.

For thy vast bounties are so numberless,
That them or to conceal, or else to tell,
Is equally impossible. Corvey.

4. Or is sometimes redundant, but is then more properly omitted.

How great soever the sins of any unreformed person are, Christ died for him because he died for all; only he must reform and forsake his sins, or else he shall never receive benefit of his death. Hammond.

5. [on, or æpe, Sax.] Before: or ever, is before ever. Obsolete.

Or we go to the declaration of this psalm, it shall be convenient to shew who did write this psalm. Fisher.

The dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd for whom, and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they sicken. Shakspeare.

Learn before thou speak, and use physick or ever thou be sick. Ecclesiasticus.

OR. n. s. [French.] Gold. A term of heraldry.

The show'ry arch
With lifted colours gay, or, azure, gules, Delights and puzzles the beholders eyes. Philips.

O'RACH. n. s. [atriplex.] A plant.

There are thirteen species; garden orach was cultivated as a culinary herb, and used as spinach, though it is not generally liked by the English, but still esteemed by the French. Miller.

O'RACLE. n. s. [oracle, Fr. oraculum, Lat.]

1. Something delivered by supernatural wisdom.

The main principle whereupon our belief of all things therein contained dependeth, is, that the scriptures are the oracles of God himself. Hooker.

2. The place where, or person of whom the determinations of heaven are inquired.

Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? Shakspeare.

God hath now sent his living oracle
Into the world to reach his final will,
And sends his spirit of truth henceforth to dwell,
In pious hearts, an inward oracle,
To all truth requisite for men to know. Milton.

3. Any person or place where certain decisions are obtained.

There mighty nations shall enquire their doom,
The world's great oracle in times to come. Pope.

4. One famed for wisdom; one whose determinations are not to be disputed.

To O'RACLE, v. n. [from the noun.] To utter oracles. A word not received.

No more shalt thou by oracling abuse
The gentiles. Milton.

ORA'CLAR. } adj. [from oracle.]
ORA'CULOUS. }

1. Uttering oracles; resembling oracles.

Thy counsel would be as the oracle of Urim and thummim, those oraculous gems
On Aaron's breast, or tongue of seers old Infallible. Milton's Paradise Regained.

Here Charles contrives the ord'ring of his flat
Here he resolves his neighb'ring princes fates;
What nation shall have peace, where war be made Determin'd is in this orac'ulous shade. Waller.

They have something venerable and oracular, that unadorned gravity and shortness in the expression. Pope.

Th' orac'ulous seer frequents the Pharian coast
Proteus a name tremendous o'er the main. Pope.

2. Positive; authoritative; magisterial; dogmatical.

Though their general acknowledgments of the weakness of human understanding look like cold and sceptical discouragements; yet the particular expressions of their sentiments are as oraculous as if they were omniscient. Glanville's Sceptic.

3. Obscure; ambiguous; like the answers of ancient oracles.

He spoke oraculous and fly,
He'd neither grant the question, nor deny. King.

ORA'CULOUSLY. adv. [from oraculous.] In manner of an oracle.

The testimonies of antiquity, and such as pass oraculously amongst us, were not always so exact as to examine the doctrine they delivered. Brown.

Hence rise the branching beech and vocal oak,
Where Jove of old oraculously spoke. Dryden.

ORA'CULOUSNESS. n. s. [from oraculous.] The state of being oracular.

O'RAISON. n. s. [oraison, Fr. oratio, Latin.]

Prayer; verbal supplication; or oral worship: more frequently written orison.

This word is pronounced short both by Shakspeare and Dryden: orison is sometimes long and sometimes short.

Stay, let's hear the oraisons he makes. Shakspeare.

Business might shorten, not disturb her pray'r;
Heav'n had the best, if not the greater share:
An active life, long oraisons forbids,
Yet still she pray'd, for still she pray'd by deeds. Dryden.

O'RAL. adj. [oral, Fr. os, oris, Lat.] Delivered by mouth; not written.

Oral discourse, whose transient faults dying with the sound that gives them life, and so not subject to a strict review, more easily escapes observation. Locke.

St. John was appealed to as the living oracle of the church; and as his oral testimony lasted the first century, many have observed, that by a particular providence several of our Saviour's disciples, and of the early converts, lived to a very great age; that they might personally convey the truth of the gospel to those times which were very remote. Addison.

O'RALLY. adv. [from oral.] By mouth; without writing.

Oral traditions were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws of a kingdom, because they are complex, not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages. Hale.

O'RANGE. n. s. [orange, Fr. aurantia, Lat.]

The leaves have two lobes or appendages at their base like ears, and cut in form of a heart; the fruit is round and depressed, and of a yellow colour when ripe, in which it differs from the citron and lemon. The species are eight. Miller.

I will discharge it in your straw-coloured beard, your orange tawny beard. Shakspeare.

The notary came aboard, holding in his hand a fruit like an orange, but of colour between orange tawny and scarlet, which cast a most excellent odour, and is used for a preservative against infection. Bacon.

The ideas of orange colour and azure, produced in the mind by the same infusion of lignum nephriticum, are no less distinct ideas than those of the same colours taken from two different bodies. Locke.

Fine oranges, sauce for your veal,
Are charming when squeez'd in a pot of brown ale. Swift.

The punie granate op'd its rose-like flow'rs;
The orange breath'd its aromatic pow'rs. Harte.

O'RANGERY. n. s. [orangerie, Fr.] Plantation of oranges.

A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery, or artificial green house. Spect.
ORANGEMUSK. n. f. A species of pear.

ORANGETAWNEY. n. f. [orange and tawney.] Red, resembling an orange.

Baronets, or knights of Nova Scotia, are commonly distinguished from others by a ribbon of wangetawney. Heylin.

ORANGEWIFE. n. f. [orange and wife.] A woman who sells oranges.

You wear out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a tale between an orangewife and a fofset seller. Shakspeare.

ORATION. n. f. [oration, Fr. oratio, Lat.] A speech made according to the laws of rhetoric; a harangue; a declamation.

There shall I try,
 In my oration, how the people take
 The cruel issue of these bloody men. Shakspeare.
 This gives life and spirit to every thing that is spoken, awakens the dullest spirits, and adds a singular grace and excellency both to the person and his oration. Watts.

ORATOR. n. f. [orateur, Fr. orator, Lat.]

1. A publick speaker; a man of eloquence.
 Poor queens and son! your labour is but lost;
 For Warwick is a subtle orator. Shakspeare.

As when of old some orator renown'd,
 In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence Flourish'd, since mute! to some great cause address'd, Stood in him self collected; while each part,
 Motion, each act, won audience. Milton.

It would be altogether vain and improper in matters belonging to an orator to pretend to strict demonstration.

The constant design of both these orators in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point. Swift.

I have listened to an orator of this species, without being able to understand one single sentence. Swift.

Both orators so much renown'd,
 In their own depths of eloquence were drown'd. Dryden.

2. A petitioner. This sense is used in addresses to chancery.

ORATORICAL. adj. [from orator.] Rhetorical; befitting an orator.

Where he speaks in an oratorical, affecting, or persuasive way, let this be explained by other places where he treats of the same theme in a doctrinal way. Watts.

ORATORY. n. f. [oratorie art, Lat.]

1. Eloquence; rhetorical expression.
 Each pasture stored with sheep feeding with sober security, while the pretty lambs with bleating oratory, craved the dams comfort. Sidney.

When a world of men
 Could not prevail with all their oratory,
 Yet hath a woman's kindness over-rul'd. Shakspeare.

When my oratory grew tow'rd end,
 I bid them that did love their country's good,
 Cry, God save Richard! Shakspeare.

Sighs now breath'd
 Unutterable, which the spirit of pray'r
 Inspir'd, and wing'd for heav'n with speedier flight
 Than loudest orator. Milton.

By this kind of oratory, and professing to decline their own inclinations and wishes, purely for peace and unity, they prevailed over those who were still surpris'd. Clarendon.

Hammond's subjects were such as had greatest influence on practice, which he prest with most affectionate tenderness, making tears part of his oratory. Fell.

The former, who had to deal with a people of much more politeness, learning, and wit, laid the greatest weight of his oratory upon the strength of his arguments. Swift.

Come harmless characters, that no one hit,
 Come Henley's oratory, Osborn's wit. Pope.

2. Exercise of eloquence.

The Romans had seized upon the fleet of the Antiates, among which there were six armed with zoftra, with which the consul Menenius adorned the public place of oratory. Arbutnot.

3. [oratoire, French.]

Oratory signifies a private place, which is deputed and allotted for prayer alone, and not for the general celebration of divine service. Ayliffe.

They began to erect to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner, which neither was possible by reason of the poor estate of the church, and had been perilous in regard of the world's envy towards them. Hooker.

Do not omit thy prayers for want of a good oratory or place to pray in; nor thy duty for want of temporal encouragements. Taylor.

ORB. n. f. [orbe, Fr. orbis, Lat.]

1. Sphere; orbicular body.

A mighty collection of water inclosed in the bowels of the earth, constitutes an huge orb in the interior or central parts; upon the surface of which orb of water the terrestrial strata are expanded. Woodward.

2. Circular body.

They with a storm of darts to distance drive
 The Trojan chief; who held at bay from far,
 On his Vulcanian orb sustain'd the war. Dryden.

3. Mundane sphere; celestial body; light of heaven.

In the floor of heav'n
 There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
 But in his motion like an angel sings,
 Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shakspeare.

4. Wheel; any rolling body.

The orbs
 Of his fierce chariot roll'd as with the sound
 Of torrent floods. Milton.

5. Circle; line drawn round.

Does the son learn action from the father? Yet all his activity is but in the epicycle of a family: whereas a subject's motion is in a larger orb. Holid.

6. Circle described by any of the mundane spheres.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricicks and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs, though no such things were. Bacon.

With smiling aspect you serenely move
 In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love. Dryden.

7. Period; revolution of time.

Self-begot, self-raised,
 By our own quick'ning power, when fatal course
 Had circled his full orb, the birth mature
 Of this our native heav'n. Milton.

8. Sphere of action.

Will you again unknit
 This churlish knot of all abhorred war,
 And move in that obedient orb again,
 Where you did give a fair and nat'ral light? Shakspeare.

9. It is applied by Milton to the eye, as being luminous and spherical.

A drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
 Or dim suffusion veil'd. Milton.

ORBA'TION. n. f. [orbatus, Lat.] Privation of parents or children.

ORBED. adj. [from orb.]

1. Round; circular; orbicular.

All those sayings will I overwear,
 And all those swearings keep as true in soul,
 As doth that orbed continent the fire,
 That severs day from night. Shakspeare.

2. Formed into a circle.

Truth and justice then
 Will down return to men,
Orb'd in a rainbow, and like glories wearing. Milton.

3. Rounded.

A golden axle did the work uphold,
 Gold was the beam, the wheels were orb'd with gold. Addison.

ORBI'CLAR. adj. [orbiculaire, Fr. orbiculus, Latin.]

1. Spherical.

He shall monarchy with thee divide
 Of all things, parted by th' empyreal bounds,
 His quadrature from thy orbicular world. Milton.

2. Circular; approaching to circularity.

The form of their bottom is not the same; for whereas before it was of an orbicular make, they now look as if they were press'd. Addison.

By a circle I understand not here a perfect geometrical circle, but an orbicular figure, whose length is equal to its breadth, and which as to sense may seem circular. Newton.

ORBI'CLARLY. adv. [from orbicular.]

Spherically; circularly.

ORBI'CLARNESS. n. f. [from orbicular.]

The state of being orbicular.

Moulded into an orb.

O'RBIT. n. f. [orbite, Fr. orbita, Lat.]

1. The line described by the revolution of a planet.

Suppose more suns in proper orbits roll'd,
 Dissolv'd the snows and chac'd the polar cold. Blackmore.

Suppose the earth placed nearer to the sun, and revolve for instance in the orbit of Mercury; there the whole ocean would even boil with extremity of heat, and be all exhaled into vapours; all plants and animals would be scorched. Bentley.

2. A small orb. Not proper.

Attend, and you discern it in the fair
 Conduct and finger, or reclaim a hair;
 Or roll the lucid orbit of an eye;
 Or in full joy elaborate a sigh. Young.

O'RBITY. n. f. [orbis, Lat.] Loss, or want of parents or children.

O'RBY. adj. [from orb.] Resembling an orb. Not used.

It smote Atreides orbis targe; but runne not through the brasse. Chapman.

When now arraid
 The world was with the spring; and orbis houres
 Had gone the round againe, through herbs and flowers. Chapman.

ORC. n. f. [orca, Lat. εγρυα.] A sort of sea fish.

An island salt and bare,
 The haunt of seals and orcs, and sea-maws clang. Milton.

TO ORDA'IN. v. a. [ordino, Lat. ordonner, French.]

1. To appoint; to decree.

Know the cause why musick was ordain'd;
 Was it not to refresh the mind of man
 After his studies, or his usual pain? Shakspeare.
 Jeroboam ordained a feast.
 As many as were ordained to eternal life, believed. Acts.

He commanded us to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead. Acts.

To souls oppress'd and dumb with grief,
 The gods ordain this kind relief,

That musick should in sounds convey What dying lovers dare not say. Waller.
The fatal tent,
The scene of death, and place ordain'd for punishment. Dryden.
My reason bends to what thy eyes ordain;
For I was born to love, and thou to reign. Prior.

2. To establish; to settle; to institute.

Mulmutius
Ordain'd our laws, whose use the sword of Cæsar Hath too much mangled. Shakspeare.
I will ordain a place for Israel. 1 Chronicles.
God from Sinai descending, will himself
In thunder, lightning, and loud trumpets sound, Ordain them laws. Milton.
Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senates, and elect by voice. Dryden.

3. To set in an office.

All signified unto you by a man, who is ordained over the affairs, shall be utterly destroyed. Esther.

4. To invest with ministerial function, or sacerdotal power.

Meletius was ordained by Arian bishops, and yet his ordination was never questioned. Stillingfl.

ORDA'INER. n. s. [from ordain.] He who ordains.

O'RDEAL. n. s. [onbal, Sax. ordalium, low Lat. ordalie, Fr.] A trial by fire or water, by which the person accused appealed to heaven, by walking blindfold over hot bars of iron; or being thrown, I suppose, into the water; whence the vulgar trial of witches.

Their ordeal laws they used in doubtful cases,
when clear proofs were wanted. Hakewill.

In the time of king John, the purgation perignem et aquam, or the trial by ordeal, continued; but it ended with this king. Hale.

O'RDER. n. s. [ordo, Lat. ordre, Fr.]

1. Method; regular disposition.

To know the true state of Solomon's house, I will keep this order; I will set forth the end of our foundation, the instruments for our works, the several employments assigned, and the ordinances we observe. Bacon.

As St. Paul was full of the doctrine of the gospel;
so it lay all clear and in order, open to his view. Locke.

2. Established process.

The moderator, when either of the disputants breaks the rules, may interpose to keep them to order. Watts.

duce suitable defects in men's understandings. Locke.

4. Regularity; settled mode.

This order with her sorrow the accords,
Which orderless all form of order brake. Daniel.

Kings are the fathers of their country, but unless they keep their own estates, they are such fathers as the sons maintain, which is against the order of nature. Davenant.

5. Mandate; precept; command.

Give order to my servants, that they take
No note of our being absent. Shakspeare.

If the lords of the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, presently some noblemen published a protestation against those orders and proclamations. Clarendon.

Upon this new fright, an order was made by both houses for disarming all the papists in England; upon which, and the like orders, though seldom any thing was after done, yet it served to keep up the apprehensions in the people, of dangers and designs, and to disincline them from any reverence or affection to the queen. Clarendon.

When christians became a distinct body, courts were set up by the order of the apostles themselves, to minister judicial process. Kettlesworth.

I have received an order under your hand for a thousand pounds in words at length. Tatler.

6. Rule; regulation.

The church hath authority to establish that for an order at one time, which at another time it may abolish, and in both do well. Hooker.

7. Regular government.

The night, their number, and the sudden act
Would dash all order, and protect their fact. Daniel.

As there is no church, where there is no order, no ministry; so where the same order and ministry is, there is the same church. Pearson.

8. A society of dignified persons distinguished by marks of honour.

Elves,
The several chairs of order look you scout,
With juice of balm and ev'ry precious flow'r. Shaks.

Princes many times make themselves desires, and set their hearts upon toys; sometimes upon a building; sometimes upon erecting of an order. Bacon.

She left immortal trophies of her fame,
And to the noblest order gave the name. Dryden.

By shining marks, distinguish'd they appear,
And various orders various ensigns bear. Granville.

Th' Almighty seeing,
From his transcendent seat the saints among,
To those bright orders utter'd thus his voice. Milton.

Like use you make of the equivocal word dignity, which is of order, or office, or dominion, or nature;
and you artificially blend and confound all together. Waterland.

10. A religious fraternity.

Find a bare foot brother out,
One of our order to associate me,
Here visiting the sick. Shakspeare.

11. [in the plural.] Hierarchical state.

If the faults of men in orders are only to be judged among themselves, they are all in some sort parties. Dryden.

Having in his youth made a good progress in learning, that he might dedicate himself more entirely to religion, he entered into holy orders, and in a few years became renowned for his sanctity of life. Addison.

When Ouranius first entered into holy orders, he had haughtiness in his temper, a great contempt and disregard for all foolish and unreasonable people;
but he has prayed away this spirit. Law.

12. Means to an end.

Virgins must remember, that the virginity of the body is only excellent in order to the purity of the soul; for in the same degree that virgins live more spiritually than other persons, in the same degree is their virginity a more excellent state. Taylor.

We should behave reverently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly towards men; and in order to the better discharge of these duties, we should govern ourselves in the use of sensual delights with temperance. Tillotson.

The best knowledge is that which is of greatest use in order to our eternal happiness. Tillotson.

What we see is in order only to what we do not see;
and both these states must be joined together. Atterbury.

One man pursues power in order to wealth, and another wealth in order to power, which last is the safer way, and generally followed. Swift.

13. Measures; care.

It were meet you should take some order for the soldiers, which are now first to be discharged and disposed of some way; which may otherwise grow to as great inconvenience, as all this that you have quit us from. Spenser.

Provide me soldiers,
Whilst I take order for mine own affairs. Shaks.

The money promised unto the king, he took no order for, albeit Sottratus required it. 2 Maccabees.

If any of the family be distressed, order is taken for their relief and competent means to live. Bacon.

14. In architecture.

A system of the several members, ornaments, and proportions of columns and pilasters; or it is a regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, especially those of a column; so as to form one beautiful whole: or order is a certain rule for the proportions of columns, and for the figures which some of the parts ought to have on the account of the proportions that are given them. There are five orders of columns; three of which are Greek, viz. the doric, ionic, and corinthian; and two Italian, viz.
the tuscan and composite. The whole is composed of two parts at least, the column and the entablature, and of four parts at the most; where there is a pedestal under the columns, and one acroter little pedestal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts: the base, the shaft, and capital; which parts are all different in the several orders.

In the tuscan order, any height being given, divide it into ten parts and three quarters, called dia-meters, by diameters is meant the thickness of the shaft at the bottom, the pedestal having two; the column with base and capital, seven; and the entablature one and three quarters.

In the doric order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third; the pedestal having two and one third, the column eight, and the entablature two.

In the ionic order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having two and two thirds, the column nine, and the entablature one and four fifths.

In the corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having three, the column nine and a half, and the entablature two.

In the composite order, the whole height is divided into fifteen diameters and one third; the pedestal having three and one third, the column ten, and the entablature two.

In a colonnade or range of pillars, the intercolumn-iation or space between columns in the tuscan order, is four diameters. In the doric order, two and three quarters; in the ionic order, two and a quarter; in the corinthian order, two; and in the composite order, one and a half. Builder's Dict.

Construction in which the parts are so disposed as to be subservient to each other.

Every man's senses differ as much from others in their figure, colour, site, and infinite other peculiarities in the organization, as any one man's can from itself, through divers accidental variations. Glanville.

That being then one plant, which has such an organization of parts in one coherent body, partaking of one common life, it continues to be the same plant, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, in a like continued organization. Locke.

To O'RGANIZE. v. a. [organiser, Fr. from organ.] To construct so as that one part co-operates with another; to form organically.

As the soul doth organize the body, and give unto every member that substance, quantity, and shape, which nature seeth most expedient, so the inward grace of sacraments may teach what serveth best for their outward form. Hooker.

A genial and cherishing heat so acts upon the fit and obsequious matter, wherein it was harboured, as to organize and fashion that disposed matter according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.

Those nobler faculties in the mind, matter organized could never produce. Ray.

The identity of the same man consists in a parti-

ORIENTA'LITY. n. f. [from oriental.]
State of being oriental.

His revolution being regular, it hath no efficacy peculiar from its orientality, but equally disperse his beams. Brown.

O'RIFICE. n. f. [orifice, Fr. orificium, Lat.]
Any opening or perforation.

The prince of Orange, in his first hurt by the Spanish boy, could find no means to stanch the blood, but was fain to have the orifice of the wound stopped by men's thumbs, succeeding one another for the space of two days. Bacon.

Their mouths
With hideous orifice gap'd on us wide, Portending hollow truce. Milton.

Ætna was bored through the top with a monstrous orifice. Addison.

Blood-letting, Hippocrates saith, should be done with broad lancets or swords, in order to make large orifice by stabbing or pertusion. Arbuthnot.

O'RIFLAMB. n. f. [probably a corruption of auriflamme, Lat. or flamme d'or, Fr.]
in like manner as orpiment is corrupted.
A golden standard. Ainsworth.

O'RIGAN. n. f. [origan, Fr. origanum, Lat.]
Wild marjoram.

I saw her in her proper hue,
Bathing herself in origin and thyme. Spenser.
ORIGIN. } n. f. [origine, French; origo, ORIGINAL. } Latin.]

1. Beginning; first existence.
The sacred historian only treats of the origins of terrestrial animals. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Fountain; source; that which gives beginning or existence.

Nature, which contains its origin,
Cannot be border'd certain in itself. Shakspeare.

If any station upon earth be honourable, theirs was; and their posterity therefore have no reason to blush at the memory of such an original. Atterbury.

Some philosophers have placed the original of power in admiration, either of surpassing form, great valour, or superior understanding. Davenant.

Original of beings! pow'r divine!
Since that I live and that I think, is thine. Prior.

These great orbs,
Primitive founts, and origins of light. Prior.

3. First copy; archetype; that from which any thing is transcribed or translated.
In this sense origin is not used.

Compare this translation with the original, the three first stanzas are rendered almost word for word, not only with the same elegance, but with the same turn of expression. Addison.

External material things, as the objects of sensation; and the operations of our minds within, as the objects of reflection; are the only originals from whence all our ideas take their beginnings.
Locke.

4. Derivation; descent.

They, like the seed from which they sprung, ac-cure.

Against the gods immortal hatred nurt;
An impious, arrogant, and cruel brood,
Expressing their original from blood. Dryden.

ORIGINAL. adj. [originel, Fr. originalis, Lat.] Primitive; pristine; first.

The original question was, whether God hath forbidden the giving any worship to himself by an image? Stillington.

Had Adam obeyed God, his original perfection,
the knowledge and ability God at first gave him,
would still have continued. Wake.

You still, fair mother, in your offspring trace
The stock of beauty destin'd for the race;
Kind nature forming them, the pattern took,
From heav'n's first work, and Eve's original look.
Prior.

ORIGINALLY. adv. [from original.]

1. Primarily; with regard to the first cause; from the beginning.

A very great difference between a king that holdeth his crown by a willing act of estates, and one that holdeth it originally by the law of nature and descent of blood. Bacon.

As God is originally holy in himself, so he might communicate his sanctity to the sons of men, whom he intended to bring unto the fruition of himself. Pearson.

A present blessing upon our fairs, is neither ori- ginally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity. Smallridge.

2. At first.

The metallic and mineral matter, found in the perpendicular intervals of the strata, was originally, and at the time of the deluge, lodged in the bodies of those strata. Woodward.

3. As the first author.

For what originally others writ,
May be so well disguis'd and so improv'd,
That with some justice it may pass for yours. Rose.

ORIGINALNESS. n. f. [from original.]

The quality or state of being original.

ORIGINARY. adj. [originaire, Fr. from origin.]

1. Productive; causing existence.

The production of animals in the originary way, requires a certain degree of warmth, which proceeds from the sun's influence. Cheyne.

2. Primitive; that which was the first state.

VOL. II.

Remember I am built of clay, and must Resolve to my originary dust. Sandys on Job.
TO ORIGINATE. v. a. [from origin.] To bring into existence.

TO ORIGINATE. v. n. To take existence.
ORINATION. n. f. [originatio, Latin;
from originate.]

1. The act or mode of bringing into existence; first production.

The tradition of the orination of mankind seems to be universal; but the particular methods of that orination excogitated by the heathen, were particular. Hale.

This eruca is propagated by animal parents, to wit, butterflies, after the common orination of all caterpillars. Ray.

Descartes first introduced the fancy of making a world, and deducing the orination of the universe from mechanical principles. Keil.

2. Descent from a primitive.

The Greek word used by the apostles to express the church, signifieth, a calling forth, if we look upon the orination. Pearson.

ORISON. n. f. [oraison, Fr. This word is variously accented; Shakspeare has the accent both on the first and second syllables; Milton and Craspaw on the first, others on the second.] A prayer; a supplication.

Nymph, in thy orisons

Be all my sins remember'd. Hamlet.

Alas! your too much love and care of me

Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch. Shaks.

He went into St. Paul's church, where he had orisons and Te Deum sung. Bacon.

My wakeful lay shall knock

At th' oriental gates, and duly mock

The early larks shrill orisons, to be

An anthem at the day's nativity. Craspaw.

His daily orisons attract our ears. Sandys.

Lowly they bow'd, adoring, and began

Their orisons, each morning duly paid. Milton.

So went he on with his orisons,

Which, if you mark them well, were wise ones. Colton.

Here at dead of night

The hermit oft, mid his orisons, hears

Aghast the voice of time disparting tow'rs. Dyer.

The midnight clock attests my fervent pray'rs,

The rising sun my orisons declares. Harte.

ORK. n. f. [orca, Lat.] A sort of great fish.

ORLOP. n. f. [overloop, Dut.] The middle deck. Skinner.

A small ship of the king's called the Pensie, was affailed by the Lyon, a principal ship of Scotland; wherein the Pensie so applied her shot, that the Lyon's oerlop was broken, her sails and tackling torn; and lastly, she was boarded and taken. Hayward.

ORNAMENT. n. f. [ornamentum, Lat.
ornement, French.]

1. Embellishment; decoration.

So may the outward shows be least themselves;

The world is still deceiv'd with ornament. Shaks.

2. Something that embellishes.

Ivorie, wrought in ornaments to decke the cheekes of horse. Chapman.

The Tuscan chief to me has sent

Their crown, and ev'ry regal ornament. Dryden.

No circumstances of life can place a man so far below the notice of the world, but that his virtues or vices will render him, in some degree, an ornament or disgrace to his profession. Rogers.

3. Honour; that which confers dignity.

They are abused and injured, and betrayed from their only perfection, whenever they are taught, that any thing is an ornament in them, that is not an ornament in the wisest amongst mankind. Law.

The persons of different qualities in both sexes, are indeed allowed their different ornaments; but these are by no means costly, being rather designed as marks of distinction than to make a figure. Add.

ORNAMENTAL. adj. [from ornament.] Serving to decoration; giving embellishment.

Some think it most ornamental to wear their bracelets on their wrists, others about their ancles.
Brown.

If the kind be capable of more perfection, though rather in the ornamental parts of it, than the essential, what rules of morality or respect have I broken, in naming the defects, that they may hereafter be amended? Dryden.

Even the heathens have esteemed this variety not only ornamental to the earth, but a proof of the wisdom of the Creator. Woodward.

If no advancement or knowledge can be had from universities, the time there spent is lost; every ornamental part of education is better taught elsewhere. Swift.

ORNAMENTALLY. adv. [from ornamen- tal.] In such a manner as may confer embellishment.

ORNAMENTED. adj. [from ornament.]
Embellished; bedecked. This is, I think, a word of late introduction, not very elegant.

ORNATE. adj. [ornatus, Lat.] Bedecked;
decorated; fine.

What thing of sea or land,
Female of sex it seems,
That so bedeck'd, ornate and gay,
Comes this way sailing? Milton's Agonistes.

ORNATENESS. n. f. [from ornate.] Finery;
state of being embellished.

ORNATURE. n. f. [ornatus, Lat.] Decoration. Ainsworth.

ORNI'SCOPIST. n. f. [ὄρνις and σκοπεῖν.]
One who examines the flight of birds in order to foretel futurity.

ORNITHO'LOGY. n. f. [ὄρνις and λόγος.] A discourse on birds.

ORPHAN. n. f. [ὀρφανός; orphelin, Fr.]
A child who has lost father or mother, or both.

Poor orphan in the wide world scattered,
As budding branch rent from the native tree,
And thrown forth until it be withered:
Such is the state of man. Spenser.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Shaks.

Sad widows, by thee rified, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain. Sandys.

The sea with spoils his angry bullets strow,

Widows and orphans making as they go. Waller.

Pity, with a parent's mind,

This helpless orphan whom thou leav'st behind. Dryden.

Collections were made for the relief of the poor, whether widows or orphans. Nelson.

ORPHAN. adj. [orphelin, Fr.] Bereft of parents.

This king, left orphan both of father and mother, found his estate, when he came to age, so disjointed even in the noblest and strongest limbs of government, that the name of a king was grown odious.
Sidney.

ORPHANAGE. } n. f. [orphelinage, Fr.

ORPHANISM. } from orphan.] State of an orphan.

ORPIMENT. n. f. [auripigmentum, Latin;
orpiment, orpin, French.]

True and genuine orpiment is a foliaceous fossil, of a fine and pure texture, remarkably heavy, and its colour is a bright and beautiful yellow, like that of gold. It is not hard but very tough, easily bending without breaking. Orpiment has been supposed to contain gold, and is found in mines of gold, silver, and copper, and sometimes in the strata of marl. Hill.

For the golden colour, it may be made by some small mixture of orpiment, such as they use to brase in the yellow alchymy; it will easily recover that which the iron loseth. Bacon.

ORPHA'NOTROPHY. n. f. [ὀρφανός and τροφή.] An hospital for orphans.

O'RPINE. n. f. [orpin, Fr. telephon, Lat.] Liverer or role root, anacampseros, Telephum, or Rhodia radis. A plant. Miller.

Cool violets and orpine growing still,
Embathed balm and cheerful galingale. Spenser.

O'RRERY. n. f. An instrument which by many complicated movements represents the revolutions of the heavenly bodies. It was first made by Mr. Rowley, a mathematician born at Lichfield, and so named from his patron the earl of Orrery: by one or other of this family almost every art has been encouraged or improved.

O'RRIS. n. f. [oris, Latin.] A plant and flower. Miller.

The nature of the orris root is almost singular; for roots that are in any degree sweet, it is but the same sweetness with the wood or leaf; but the orris is not sweet in the leaf; neither is the flower any thing so sweet as the root. Bacon.

O'RRIS. n. f. [old French.] A sort of gold or silver lace.

ORTS. n. f. seldom with a singular. [This word is derived by Skinner from ort, German, the fourth part of any thing; by Lye more reasonably from orda, Irish, a fragment. In Anglo Saxon, ord signifies the beginning; whence in some provinces odds and ends, for ords and ends, signify remnants, scattered pieces, refuse; from ord thus used probably came ort.] Refuse; things left or thrown away. Obsolete.

He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth;
A barren-spirited fellow, one that feeds

On abject orts and imitations. Shakspeare.

The fractions of her faith, orts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques
Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomedes. Shakspeare.

Much good do't you then;
Brave plush and velvet men
Can feed on orts, and safe in your stage-cloths, Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stagers, and the stage-wrights too. Ben Jonson.

O'RTHO'DOX. } adj. [ὀρθός and δόξα;
ORTHODO'XAL. } orthodox, French.]

Sound in opinion and doctrine; not heretical. Orthodoxal is not used.

Be you persuaded and settled in the true protestant religion professed by the church of England, which is as sound and orthodox in the doctrine thereof, as any christian church in the world. Bacon.

An uniform profession of one and the same orthodoxal verity, which was once given to the saints in the holy apostles days. White.

Eternal bliss is not immediately superstructed on the most orthodox beliefs; but as our Saviour saith, If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them; the doing must be first superstructed on the knowing or believing, before any happiness can be built on it. Hammond.

Origen and the two Clemens's, their works were originally orthodox, but had been afterwards corrupted, and interpolated by hereticks in some parts of them. Waterland.

O'RTHO'DOXLY. adv. [from orthodox.] With soundness of opinion.

The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is so soundly and so orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to the honour of our religion. Bacon.

O'RTHO'DOXY. n. f. [ὀρθοδοξία; orthodoxie, Fr. from orthodox.] Soundness in opinion and doctrine.

Basil himself bears full and clear testimony to Gregory's orthodoxy. Waterland.

I do not attempt explaining the mysteries of the christian religion; since Providence intended there should be mysteries, it cannot be agreeable to piety, orthodoxy, or good sense, to go about it. Swift.

O'RTHO'DROMICKS. n. f. [from ὀρθός and δρόμος.] The art of sailing in the arc of some great circle, which is the shortest or straightest distance between any two points on the surface of the globe. Harris.

O'RTHO'DROMY. n. f. [ὀρθός and δρόμος; orthodromie, Fr.] Sailing in a straight course.

O'RTHO'GON. n. f. [ὀρθός and γωνία.] A rectangled figure.

The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments; your cylinder for vaulted turrets and round buildings; your orthogon and pyramid, for sharp steeples. Peacbam.

O'RTHO'GONAL. adj. [orthogonal, Fr. from orthogon.] Rectangular.

O'RTHO'GRAPHER. n. f. [ὀρθός and γράφω.] One who spells according to the rules of grammar.

He was wont to speak plain, like an honest man and a soldier; and now he is turn'd orthographer, his words are just so many strange dishes. Shakspeare.

O'RTHO'GRAPHICAL. adj. [from orthography.]

1. Rightly spelled.
2. Relating to the spelling.

I received from him the following letter, which, after having rectified some little orthographical mistakes, I shall make a present of to the public. Speclator.

3. Delineated according to the elevation, not the ground-plot.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation and the just dimensions of each face, and of what belongs to it. Mortimer.

O'RTHO'GRAPHICALLY. adj. [from orthographical.]

1. According to the rules of spelling.
2. According to the elevation.

O'RTHO'GRAPHY. n. f. [ὀρθός and γράφω; orthographie, French.]

1. The part of grammar which teaches how words should be spelled.

This would render languages much more easy to be learned, as to reading and pronouncing, and especially as to the writing them, which now as they stand we find to be troublesome, and it is no small part of grammar which treats of orthography and right pronunciation. Holder.

2. The art or practice of spelling.

In London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs; all which reduced to writing, would entirely confound orthography. Swift.

3. The elevation of a building delineated.

You have the orthography or upright of this ground-plot, and the explanation with a scale of feet and inches. Moxon.

O'RTHO'PNOEA. n. f. [ὀρθοπνοία; orthopnée, Fr.] A disorder of the lungs, in which respiration can be performed only in an upright posture.

His disease was an asthma oft turning to an orthopnoea; the cause a translation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey.

O'RTIVE. adj. [ortive, Fr. ortivus, Latin.] Relating to the rising of any planet or star.

O'RTOLAN. n. f. [French.] A small bird accounted very delicious.

Nor ortolans nor godwits. Cowley.

O'RVAL. n. f. [orvale, Fr. orvala, Lat.] The herb clary. Diſt.

O'RVIE'TAN. n. f. [orvietano, Italian; so called from a mountebank at Orvieto in Italy.] An antidote or counter poison; a medicinal composition or electuary, good against poison. Bailey.

OSCHEO'CELE. n. f. [ὄσχεον and κέλη.] A kind of hernia when the intestines break into the scrotum. Diſt.

OSCILLA'TION. n. f. [oscillum, Lat.] The act of moving backward and forward like a pendulum.

OSCI'LLATORY. adj. [oscillum, Lat.] Moving backward and forward like a pendulum.

The actions upon the solids are stimulating or increasing their vibrations, or oscillatory motions. Arbutnot.

OSCI'TANCY. n. f. [oscitantia, Latin.]

1. The act of yawning.
2. Unusual sleepiness; carelessness.

If persons of circumspect piety have been overtaken, what security can there be for our wreckless oscitancy? Government of the Tongue.

It might proceed from the oscitancy of transcribers, who, to dispatch their work the sooner, used to write all numbers in cyphers. Speclator.

OSCI'TANT. adj. [oscitans, Latin.]

1. Yawning; unusually sleepy.
2. Sleepy; sluggish.

Our oscitant lazy piety gave vacancy for them, and they will now lend none back again. Decay of Piety.

OSCITA'TION. n. f. [oscito, Lat.] The act of yawning.

I shall defer considering this subject till I come to my treatise of oscitation, laughter, and ridicule. Tatler.

O'SIER. n. f. [osier, Fr. vitex, Lat..] A tree of the willow kind, growing by the water, of which the twigs are used for basket-work.

The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place. Shakspeare

Ere the sun advance his burning eye,
I must fill up this osier cage of ours
With baleful weeds and precious juiced flowers. Shakspeare

Car comes crown'd with osier, fags, and weed. Drayton

Bring them for food sweet boughs and osiers cut Nor all the winter long thy hay-rick shut. Mil

Like her no nymph can willing osiers bend,
In basket-works, which painted streaks commend. Dryden

Along the marshes spread,
We make the osier fringed bank our bed. Pope

O'SMUND. n. f. A plant. It is sometimes used in medicine. It grows upon banks in divers parts of England. Mill.

O'SPRAY. n. f. [corrupted from offspring, Lat.] The sea eagle, of which it is reported, that when he hovers in the air all the fish in the water turn up their bellies, and lie still for him to seize which he pleases. Hann.

I think he'll be to Rome,
As is the ospray to the fish, who takes it
By sovereignty of nature. Shakspeare

Among the fowls shall not be eaten, the eagle, Num offspring, and the ospray.

O'SSELET. n. f. [French.] A little substance arising on the inside of a horse's knee, among the small bones it grows out of a gummy substance which fastens those bones together. Farrier's

O'SSICLE. n. f. [ossiculum, Latin.] A bone.

There are three very little bones in the ear, whose right constitution depends the due tension of the tympanum; and if the action of one of these ossicles, fix tympanum, be lost or abated, the tension of that membrane ceasing, sound is hindered from coming into the ear. Holder.

OSSI'FICK. adj. [ossa and facio, Lat.] Having the power of making bones, or changing carneous or membranous to bony substance.

If the caries be superficial, and the bone firm, you may by medicaments consume the moisture in the caries, dry the bone, and dispose it, by virtue of its ossific faculty, to thrust out callus, and make separation of its caries. Wise man.

OSSI'FICATION. n. s. [from ossify.] Change of carneous, membranous, or cartilaginous, into bony substance.

Ossifications or indurations of the artery, appear so constantly in the beginnings of aneurisms, that it is not easy to judge whether they are the cause or the effect of them. Sharp.

OSSI'FRAGE. n. s. [ossifraga, Lat. ossifrague, Fr.] A kind of eagle, whose flesh is forbid under the name of gryphon. The ossifraga or ospray, is thus called, because it breaks the bones of animals in order to come at the marrow. It is said to dig up bodies in church-yards, and eat what it finds in the bones, which has been the occasion that the Latins call it avis bustaria. See OSPRAY. Calmet.

OSSI'FY. v. a. [ossa and facio.] To change to bone.

The dilated aorta every where in the neighbourhood of the cyst is generally ossified. Sharp.

OSSI'VOROUS. adj. [ossa and voros.] Devouring bones.

The bone of the gullet is not in all creatures alike, as in the fox, which feeds on bones, and swallows whole, or with little chewing; and next in a dog and other ossivorous quadrupeds, it is very large. Derham.

OSSUARY. n. s. [ossuarium, Lat.] A charnel-house; a place where the bones of dead people are kept. Dict.

OST. n. s. A vessel upon which hops or malt are dried. Dict.

OSTENSIBLE. adj. [ostendo, Lat.] Such as is proper or intended to be shown.

OSTENSIVE. adj. [ostentif, French; ostendo, Latin.] Showing; betokening.

OSTENT. n. s. [ostentum, Lat.]

1. Appearance; air; manner; mien.
Use all th' observance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent,
To please his grandam. Shakspeare.

2. Show; token. These senses are peculiar to Shakspeare.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair ostents of love
As shall conveniently become you there. Shakspeare.

3. A portent; a prodigy; any thing ominous.

To stir our zeals up, that admir'd, whereof a fact so cleane

Of all ill as our sacrifice, so fearfull an ostent
Should be the issue. Chapman.

Latinus, frighted with his dire ostent,
For counsel to his father Faunus went;

And sought the shades renown'd for prophecy,
Which near Alburnia's sulph'rous fountain lie. Dryden.

OSTENTATION. n. s. [ostentation, French; ostentatio, Latin.]

1. Outward show; appearance.

If these shows be not outward, which of you

But is four Volscians?—
—March on my fellows;

Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us. Shakspeare.

You are come

A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented

The ostentation of our love. Shakspeare.

2. Ambitious display; boast; vain show.

This is the usual sense.

If all these secret springs of detraction fail, yet a vain ostentation of wit sets a man on attacking an established name, and sacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of those about him. Spectator.

He knew that good and bountiful minds were sometimes inclined to ostentation, and ready to cover it with pretence of inciting others by their example, and therefore checks this vanity: Take heed, says he, that you do not your alms before men, to be seen. Atterbury.

With all her lustre, now, her lover warms;
Then out of ostentation, hides her charms. Young.

The great end of the art is to strike the imagination. The painter is therefore to make no ostentation of the means by which this is done; the spectator is only to feel the result in his bosom. Reynolds.

3. A show; a spectacle. Not in use.

The king would have me present the princess with some delightful ostentation, show, pageant, antick, or firework. Shakspeare.

OSTENTA'TIOUS. adj. [ostento, Latin.]

Boastful; vain; fond of show; fond to expose to view.

Your modesty is so far from being ostentatious of the good you do, that it blushes even to have it known; and therefore I must leave you to the satisfaction of your own conscience, which, though a silent panegyrick, is yet the best. Dryden.

They let Ulysses into his disposition, and he seems to be ignorant, credulous, and ostentatious. Broome.

OSTENTA'TIOUSLY. adv. [from ostentatious.] Vainly; boastfully.

OSTENTA'TIOUSNESS. n. s. [from ostentatious.] Vanity; boastfulness.

OSTENTA'TOUR. n. s. [ostentateur, Fr. ostento, Lat.] A boaster; a vain setter to show.

OSTEOCOLLA. n. s. [ὀστέον and κολλάω; osteo-colle, Fr.] Osteocolla is frequent in Germany, and has long been famous for bringing on a callus in fractured bones. Hill.

Osteocolla is a spar, generally coarse, concreted with earthy or stony matter, precipitated by water, and incruited upon sticks, stones, and other like bodies. Woodward.

OSTEOCOPE. n. s. [ὀστέον and κόπτω; osteo-cope, Fr.] Pains in the bones, or rather in the nerves and membranes that encompass them.

OSTEOLOGY. n. s. [ὀστέον and λόγος; osteologie, Fr.] A description of the bones.

Richard Farloe, well known for his acuteness in dissection of dead bodies, and his great skill in osteology, has now laid by that practice. Tatler.

OSTI'ARY. n. s. [ostium, Lat.] The opening at which a river disembogues itself.

It is received, that the Nilus hath seven ostiaries, that is, by seven channels disburtheneth itself unto the sea. Brown.

OSTLER. n. s. [hostelier, Fr.] The man who takes care of horses at an inn.

The smith, the ostler, and the boot-catcher, ought to partake. Swift.

OSTLERY. n. s. [hostelerie, Fr.] The place belonging to the ostler.

OSTRACISM. n. s. [ὀστρακισμός; ostracisme, Fr.] A manner of passing sentence, in which the note of acquittal or condemnation was marked upon a shell which the voter threw into a vessel. Banishment; publick censure.

Virtue in courtiers hearts
Suffers an ostracism, and departs;
Profit, ease, fitness, plenty, bid it go,
But whither, only knowing you, I know. Donne.

Publick envy is as an ostracism, that eclipseth men when they grow too great; and therefore it is a bridle to keep them within bounds. Bacon.

Hyperbolus by suffering did traduce

The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use. Cleaveland.

This man, upon a slight and false accusation of favouring arbitrary power, was banished by ostracism; which in English would signify, that they voted he should be removed from their presence and council for ever. Swift.

OSTRACITES. n. s. Ostracites expresses the common oyster in its fossil state. Hill.

OSTRICH. n. s. [autruche, French; struthio, Latin.] Ostrich is ranged among birds. It is very large, its wings very short, and the neck about four or five spans. The feathers of its wings are in great esteem, and are used as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are stained of several colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of course, for they never fly; but use their wings to assist them in running more swiftly. The ostrich swallows bits of iron or brass, in the same manner as other birds will swallow small stones or gravel, to assist in digesting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the sand, and the sun hatches them. Calmet.

I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Shakspeare.

Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacock? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich? Job.

The Scots knights errant fight, and fight to eat,
Their ostrich stomachs make their swords their meat. Cleaveland.

Modern ostriches are dwindled to meer larks, in comparison with those of the ancients. Arbutnot.

OTACOU'STICK. n. s. [ὠτρά and ἀκούς; otacoustique, Fr.] An instrument to facilitate hearing.

In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is supplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural otacoustick, is so directed backward, as to receive the smallest and most distant sound that comes behind her. Grew.

OTHER. pron. [οὔτε, Sax. autre, Fr.]

1. Not the same; not this; different. In this sense it seems an adjective, yet in the plural, when the substantive is suppressed, it has, contrarily to the nature of adjectives, a plural termination: as, of last week three days were fair, the others rainy.

Of good actions some are better than other some. Hooker.

Will it not be receiv'd

That they have don't?—

—Who dares receive it other? Shakspeare.

The dismayed matrons and maidens, some in their houses, other some in the churches, with floods of tears and lamentable cries, poured forth their prayers to the Almighty, craving his help in that their hard distress. Kneller.

He that will not give just occasion to think, that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of beasts, where the strongest carries; and so lay a foundation for perpetual disorder and mischief, tumult, sedition, and rebellion; things that the followers of that hypothesis so loudly cry out against, must of necessity find out another state of government. Locke.

No leaves shall ever be made other than leaves for years not exceeding thirty-one, in possession, and not in reversion or remainder. Swift.

2. Not I, or he, but some one else. In this sense it is a substantive, and has a genitive and plural.

Were I king,

I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
Desire his jewels and this other's house. Shakspeare.

Physicians are some of them so conformable to the will of the patient, as they press not the cure of the disease; and some other are so regular in proceeding according to art, as they respect not the condition of the patient.

Bacon.

The confusion arises, when the one will put their sickle into the other's harvest.

Lesley.

Never allow yourselves to be idle, whilst others are in want of any thing that your hands can make for them.

Law.

The king had all he crav'd, or could compel, And all was done—let others judge how well.

Daniel.

3. Not the one, not this, but the contrary.

There is that controlling worth in goodness, that the will cannot but like and desire it; and on the other side, that odious deformity in vice, that it never offers itself to the affections of mankind, but under the disguise of the other.

South.

4. Correlative to each.

In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves.

Philippians.

Scotland and thou did each in other live, Nor would'st thou her, nor could she thee survive.

Dryden.

5. Something beside.

The learning of Latin being nothing but the learning of words, join as much other real knowledge with it as you can.

Locke.

6. The next.

Thy air,

Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first; A third is like the former.

Shakespeare.

7. The third part.

Bind my hair up: as 'twas yesterday? No, nor the other day.

Ben Jonson.

8. It is sometimes put elliptically for other thing; something different.

I can expect no other from those that judge by single sights and rash measures, than to be thought fond or insolent.

Glanville.

O'THERGATES. adv. [other and gate, for way.] In another manner.

If sir Toby had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did.

Shakespeare.

O'THERGUISE. adv. [other and guise. This is often pronounced and sometimes written othergues.] Of another kind.

O'THERWHERE. adv. [other and where.] In other places.

As Jews they had access to the temple and synagogues, but as Christians they were of necessity forced otherwhere to assemble themselves.

Hooker.

His godlike acts, and his temptations fierce, And former sufferings, otherwhere are found.

Milton.

O'THERWHILE. adv. [other and while.] At other times.

O'THERWISE. adv. [other and wise.]

1. In a different manner.

They only plead, that whatsoever God revealeth, as necessary for all christian men to do and believe, the same we ought to embrace, whether we have received it by writing or otherwise, which no man denieth.

Hooker.

The whole church hath not tied the parts unto one and the same thing, they being therein left each to their own choice, may either do as others do, or else otherwise, without any breach of duty at all.

Hooker.

The evidences for such things are not so infallible, but that there is a possibility that the things may be otherwise.

Wilkins.

In these good things, what all others should practise, we should scarce know to practise otherwise.

Spratt.

Thy father was a worthy prince, And merited, alas! a better fate; But heaven thought otherwise.

Addison.

2. By other causes.

Sir John Norris failed in the attempts of Lisborn, and returned with the loss, by sickness and otherwise, of eight thousand men.

Raleigh.

3. In other respects.

It is said truly, that the best men otherwise, are not always the best in regard of society.

Hooker.

Men seldom consider God any otherwise than in relation to themselves, and therefore want some extraordinary benefits to excite their attention, and engage their love.

Rogers.

O'TTER. n. f. [otter, Sax. lutra, Lat.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fish.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better swimming, are joined together with a membrane, as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canin; and in his tail, which is felin, or a long taper: so that he may not be unfitly called putorius aquaticus, or the water polecat. He makes himself burrows on the water-side, as a beaver; is sometimes tamed, and taught by nimbly surrounding the fishes, to drive them into the net.

Grew.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's skin stuffed with hay.

SpeEtator.

Would ye preserve a num'rous finny race?

Let your fierce dogs the rav'nous otter chase;

Th' amphibious monster ranges all the shores,

Darts thro' the waves, and ev'ry haunt explores.

Gay.

O'VAL. adj. [ovale, Fr. ovum, Lat. an egg]

Oblong; resembling the longitudinal section of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itself on both sides in an oval figure of an hundred yards.

Addison on Italy.

Mercurius, nearest to the central sun,

Does on an oval orbit, circling run;

But rarely is the object of our sight,

In solar glory sunk.

Blackmore.

O'VAL. n. f.

A triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the shape of an egg.

Watts.

OVARIOUS. adj. [from ovum, Lat.] Consisting of eggs.

He to the rocks

Dire clinging gathers his ovarious food.

Thomson.

O'VARY. n. f. [ovaire, Fr. ovarium, Lat.]

The part of the body in which impregnation is performed.

The ovary or part where the white involveth it, is in the second region of the matrix, which is somewhat long and inverted.

Brown.

OVA'TION. n. f. [ovation, Fr. ovatio, Lat.]

A lesser triumph among the Romans allowed to those commanders who had won a victory without much bloodshed, or defeated some less formidable enemy.

DiE.

O'UBAT. } n. f. [eruca pilosa, Lat.] A } O'UBUST. } sort of caterpillar; an insect.

DiE.

OUCH. n. f. An ornament of gold or jewels.

Ouches or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory.

Brown.

OUCH of a boar. The blow given by a boar's tusk.

Ainsworth.

O'VEN. n. f. [open, Sax.] An arched cavity heated with fire to bake bread.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard,

And from his wide devouring oven sent

A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard,

Him all amaz'd.

Spenser.

Here's yet in the world hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heat of the oven, and the baking.

Shakespeare.

Bats have been found in ovens and other hollow close places, matted one upon another; and therefore it is likely that they sleep in the winter, and eat nothing.

Bacon.

O'VER hath a double signification in the names of places, according to the different situation of them. If the place be upon or near a river, it comes from the Saxon ofne, a brink or bank: but if there is in the neighbourhood another of the same name, distinguished by the addition of nether, then over is from the Gothick ufar, above. Gibson's Camden.

O'VER. prep. [ufar, Gothick; ofne, Sax.]

1. Above, with respect to excellence or dignity.

How happy some, o'er other some can be!
Thro' Athens I am thought as fair as she.

Shakespeare.

Young Pallas shone conspicuous o'er the rest;
Gilded his arms, embroider'd was his vest.

Dryden.

High, over all, was your great conduct shown,
You fought our safety, but forgot your own.

Dryden.

The commentary which attends this poem, will have one advantage over most commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures.

Pope.

It will afford field enough for a divine to enlarge on, by shewing the advantages which the Christian world has over the Heathen.

Swift.

2. Above, with regard to rule or authority: opposed to under.

The church has over her bishops, able to silence the factious, no less by their preaching than by their authority.

South.

Captain, yourself are the fittest to live and reign not over, but next and immediately under the people.

Dryden.

3. Above in place: opposed to below.

He was more than over shoes in love.
The street should see as she walks over head.

Shakespeare.

Thrice happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care,
Over whose heads those arrows fly,
Of sad distrust and jealousy.

Waller.

4. Across; from side to side: as, he leaped over the brook.

Come o'er the brook Betty to me,
She dares not come over to thee.

Shakespeare.

Certain lakes and pits, such as that of Avennes, poison birds which fly over them.

Bacon.

The geese fly o'er the barn, the bees in arms
Drive headlong from their waxen cells in swarms.

Dryden.

5. Through; diffusively.

All the world over, those that received not the commands of Christ and his doctrines of purity and perseverance, were signally destroyed.

Hammond.

6. Upon.

Wise governours have as great a watch over fames, as they have of the actions and designs.

Bacon.

Sung heav'nly anthems of his victory
Over temptation and the tempter proud.

Milton.

7. Before. This is only used in over night.

On their intended journey to proceed,
And over night whatso thereto did need.

Hub. Tale.

8. It is in all senses written by contraction o'er.

1. Above the top.

Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together and running over, shall men give.

Luke.

2. More than a quantity assigned.

Even here likewise the laws of nature and reason be of necessary use; yet somewhat over and besides them is necessary, namely human and positive law.

Hooker.

When they had mete it, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack.

Exodus.

The ordinary soldiers having all their pay, and a month's pay over, were sent into their countries.

Hayward.

The eastern people determined their digit by the breadth of barley-corns, fix making a digit, and twenty-four a hand's breadth: a small matter over or under.

Arbutnot.

3. From side to side.

The fan of an Indian king, made of the feathers of a peacock's tail, composed into a round form, bound altogether with a circular rim, above a foot over.

Grew.

4. From one to another.

- This golden cluster the herald delivereth to the Tirsan, who delivereth it over to that son that he had chosen. Bacon.
5. From a country beyond the sea.
It hath a white berry, but is not brought over with the coral. Bacon.
They brought new customs and new vices o'er;
Taught us more arts than honest men require. Philips.
6. On the surface.
The first came out red all over, like an airy garment. Genesis.
7. Past. This is rather the sense of an adjective.
Soliman pausing upon the matter, the heat of his fury being something over, suffered himself to be intreated. Knolles.
Meditate upon the effects of anger; and the best time to do this, is to look back upon anger when the fit is over. Bacon.
What the garden choicest bears
To fit and taste, till his meridian heat
Be over, and the sun more cool decline. Milton.
The act of stealing was soon over, and cannot be undone, and for it the sinner is only answerable to God or his vicegerent. Taylor.
He will, as soon as his first surprize is over, begin to wonder how such a favour came to be bestowed on him. Atterbury.
There youths and nymphs in comfort gay,
Shall hail the rising, close the parting day;
With me, alas! with me those joys are o'er,
For me the vernal garlands bloom no more. Pope.
8. Throughout; completely.
Well,
Have you read o'er the letters I sent you? Shaksp.
Let them argue over all the topics of divine goodness and human weakness, yet how trifling must be their plea! South.
9. With repetition; another time.
He o'er and o'er divides him,
'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness. Shaksp.
Sitting or standing still confin'd to roar,
In the same verse, the same rules o'er and o'er. Dryden.
Longing they look, and gaping at the sight,
Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight. Dryden.
Thou, my Hector, art thyself alone,
My parents, brothers, and my lord in one:
O kill not all my kindred o'er again,
Nor tempt the dangers of the dusty plain;
But in this tow'r, for our defence, remain. } Dryd.
When children forget, or do an action aukwardly, make them do it over and over again, till they are perfect. Locke.
If this miracle of Christ's rising from the dead, be not sufficient to convince a resolved libertine, neither would the rising of one now from the dead be sufficient for that purpose; since it would only be the doing that over again which hath been done already. Atterbury.
The most learned will never find occasion to act over again what is fabled of Alexander the Great, that when he had conquered the eastern world, he wept for want of more worlds to conquer. Watts.
He cram'd his pockets with the precious store,
And ev'ry night review'd it o'er and o'er. Harte.
10. Extraordinary; in a great degree.
The word symbol should not seem to be over difficult. Baker.
11. OVER and above. Besides; beyond what was first supposed, or immediately intended.
Moses took the redemption money of them that were over and above. Numbers.
He gathered a great mass of treasure, and gained over and above the good will and esteem of all people wherever he came. L'Estrange.
12. OVER against. Opposite; regarding in front.
In Ticinum is a church with windows only from above. It reporteth the voice thirteen times, if you stand by the close end of the wall, over against the door. Bacon.
I visit his picture, and place myself over against it whole hours together. Speclator.
Over against this church stands a large hospital, erected by a shoemaker. Addison on Italy.

13. To give over. To cease from.
These when they praise, the world believes no more,
Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er. Pope.
14. To give over. To attempt to help no longer: as, his physicians have given him over; his friends who advised him, have given him over.
15. In composition it has a great variety of significations; it is arbitrarily prefixed to nouns, adjectives, or other parts of speech in a sense equivalent to more than enough; too much.
Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his pow'r: and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste. Shakspere.
St. Hierom reporteth, that he saw a satyr; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or over-boldly affirm. Peacbam.
These over-busy spirits, whose labour is their only reward, hunt a shadow and chase the wind. Decay of Piety.
If the ferment of the breast be vigorous, an over-fermentation in the part produceth a phlegmon. Wiseman.
A gangrene doth arise in phlegmons, through the unseasonable application of over-cold medicaments. Wiseman.
Poets, like lovers, should be bold and dare,
They spoil their business with an over-care:
And he who servilely creeps after sense,
Is safe, but ne'er will reach an excellence. Dryden.
Wretched man o'erfeeds
His cram'd desires, with more than nature needs. Dryden.
Bending o'er the cup, the tears she shed,
Seem'd by the posture to discharge her head,
O'er-fill'd before. Dryden.
As they are likely to over-flourish their own case, their flattery is hardest to be discovered: for who would imagine himself guilty of putting tricks upon himself? Collier.
He has afforded us only the twilight of probability; suitable to that state of mediocrity he has placed us in here; wherein to check our over-confidence and presumption, we might, by every day's experience, be made sensible of our shortsightedness. Locke.
This part of grammar has been much neglected, as some others over-diligently cultivated. It is easy for men to write one after another of cases and genders. Locke.
It is an ill way of establishing this truth, and silencing atheists, to take some men's having that idea of God in their minds, for the only proof of a deity; and out of an over-fondness of that darling invention, cashier all other arguments. Locke.
A grown person surfeiting with honey, no sooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries sickness and qualms to his stomach: had this happened to him by an over-dose of honey, when a child, all the same effects would have followed, but the cause would have been mistaken, and the antipathy counted natural. Locke.
Take care you over-burn not the turf; it is only to be burnt so as may make it break. Mortimer.
Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby nauseate and grow tired of a particular subject. Watts.
The memory of the learner should not be too much crowded with a tumultuous heap of ideas; one idea effaces another. An over-greedy grasp does not retain the largest handful. Watts.
- To OVERABOUND, v. n. [over and abound.]*
To abound more than enough.
Both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'er-abound. Pbil.
The learned, never over-abounding in transitory coin, should not be discontented. Pope.
- To OVERACT, v. a. [over and act.]* To act more than enough.
You over-act when you should underdo:
A little call yourself again, and think. Ben Jonson.
Princes courts may over-act their reverence, and make themselves laughed at for their foolishness and extravagant relative worship. Stillington.

- Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety, by over-acting some things in religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Tillotson.
He over-acted his part; his passions, when once let loose, were too impetuous to be managed. Atterbury.
- To OVERARCH, v. a. [over and arch.]* To cover as with an arch.
Where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendant woods. Pope.
- To OVERAWE, v. a. [over and awe.]* To keep in awe by superiour influence.
The king was present in person to overlook the magistrates, and to over-awe these subjects with the terror of his sword. Spenser.
Her graceful innocence, her every air
Of gesture, or least action, over-aw'd
His malice. Milton.
I could be content to be your chief tormentor, ever paying you mock reverence, and sounding in your ears the empty title which inspired yet with presumption, and over-awed my daughter to comply. Addison's Guardian.
A thousand fears Still over-awe when she appears. Glanville.
- To OVERBALANCE, v. a. To weigh down; to preponderate.*
Not doubting but by the weight of reason I should counterpoise the *over-balance*s of any factions. King Charles.
The hundred thousand pounds per annum, wherein we over-balance them in trade, must be paid us in money. Locke.
When these important considerations are set before a rational being, acknowledging the truth of every article, should a bare single possibility be of weight enough to over-balance them. Rogers.
- OVERBALANCE, n. s. [over and balance.]*
Something more than equivalent.
Our exported commodities would, by the return, encrease the treasure of this kingdom above what it can ever be by other means, than a mighty over-balance of our exported to our imported commodities. Temple.
The mind should be kept in a perfect indifference, not inclining to either side, any further than the over-balance of probability gives it the turn of assent and belief. Locke.
- OVERBATTLE, adj. [Of this word I know not the derivation; batten is to grow fat, and to battle, is at Oxford to feed on trust.]* Too fruitful; exuberant.
In the church of God sometimes it cometh to pass, as in over-battle grounds; the fertile disposition whereof is good, yet because it exceedeth due proportion, it bringeth abundantly, through too much rankness, things less profitable, whereby that which principally it should yield, either prevented in place or defrauded of nourishment, faileth. Hooker.
- To OVERBEAR, v. a. [over and bear.]* To repress; to subdue; to whelm; to bear down.
What more savage than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws? Hooker.
My desire
All continent impediments would o'er-bear,
That did oppose my will. Shakspere.
The ocean o'er-peering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head, O'er-bears your officers. Shakspere.
Our counsel, it pleas'd your highness
To over-bear. Shakspere.
Gloster, thou shalt well perceive,
That nor in birth or for authority,
The bishop will be over-borne by thee. Shaksp.
The Turkish commanders, with all their forces, assailed the city, thrusting their men into the breaches by heaps, as if they would, with very multitude, have discourage! or over-burn the christians. Knolles.
The point of reputation, when news first came of the battle lost, did over-bear the reason of war. Bacon.

OVE

Yet fortune, valour, all is over-born
By numbers; as the long resisting bank
By the impetuous torrent. Denham.

A body may as well be over-born by the violence Of a shallow, rapid stream, as swallowed up in the gulf of smooth water. L'Estrange.

Crowding on the last the first impel;
Till over-born with weight the Cyprians fell. Dryd.

The judgment, if swayed by the over-bearing of passion, and stored with lubricious opinions instead of clearly-conceived truths, will be erroneous.
Glanville's Scopsis.

Take care that the memory of the learner be not too much crowded with a tumultuous heap, or over- bearing multitude of documents at one time. Watts.

The horror or loathsomeness of an object may over-bear the pleasure which results from its greatness, novelty, or beauty. Addison.

To OVERBID. v. a. [over and bid.] To offer more than equivalent.

You have o'er-bid all my past sufferings,
And all my future too. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

To OVERBLOW. v. n. [over and blow.]
To be past its violence.

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
Until the blustering storm is over-blown. Spenser.

All those tempests being over-blown, there long after arose a new storm which over-run all Spain.
Spenser.

Thisague fit of fear is over-blown,
An easy task it is to win our own. Shakspeare.

Seiz'd with secret joy,
When storms are over-blown. Dryden.

To OVERBLOW. v. a. [over and blow.]
To drive away as clouds before the wind.

Some angel that beholds her there,
Instruct us to record what she was here;
And when this cloud of sorrow's over-blown,
Thro' the wide world we'll make her graces known.
Waller.

OVERBOARD. adv. [over and board. See BOARD.] Off the ship; out of the ship.

The great assembly met again; and now he that was the cause of the tempest being thrown over- board, there were hopes a calm should ensue. Hewel.

A merchant having a vessel richly fraught at sea in a storm, there is but one certain way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading over-board.
South.

The trembling dotard to the deck he drew,
And hoisted up and over-board he threw;
This done, he seiz'd the helm. Dryden.

He obtained liberty to give them only one song before he leaped over-board, which he did, and then plunged into the sea. L'Estrange.

Though great ships were commonly bad sea-boats, they had a superiour force in a sea engagement: the shock of them being sometimes so violent, that it would throw the crew on the upper deck of lesser ships over-board. Arbutnot.

To OVERBULK. v. a. [over and bulk.] To oppress by bulk.

The feeding pride,
In rank Achilles, must or now be crott,
Or shedding, breed a nursery of like evils,
To over-bulk us all. Shakspeare.

To OVERBURDEN. v. a. [over and burden.]
To load with too great weight.

If she were not cloyed with his company, and that she thought not the earth over-burthened with him, she would cool his fiery grief. Sidney.

To OVERBUY. v. a. [over and buy.] To buy too dear.

He, when want requires, is only wise,
Who flights not foreign aids, nor over-buys;
But on our native strength, in time of need, relies.
Dryden.

To OVERCARRY. v. a. [over and carry.]
To hurry too far; to be urged to any thing violent or dangerous.

He was the king's uncle, but yet of no capacity to succeed; by reason whereof his natural affection and duty was less easy to be overcarried by ambition.
Hayward.

To OVERCAST. v. a. part. overcast. [over and cast.]

OVE

1. To cloud; to darken; to cover with gloom.

As they pass,

The day with clouds was sudden over-cast. Spenser.

Hie, Robin, over-cast the night;
The starry welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron. Shaksp.

Our days of age are sad and over-cast, in which we find that of all our vain passions and affections past, the sorrow only abideth. Raleigh.

I of fumes, and humid vapours made,
No cloud in so serene a mansion find,
To over-cast her ever-shining mind. Waller.

Those clouds that over-cast our morn shall fly,
Dispell'd to farthest corners of the sky. Dryden.

The dawn is over-cast, the morning lours,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison.

2. To cover. This sense is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is encircled with a thread, over- cast.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the suspicion of an evil intent, the colour wherewith it overcasteth itself is always a fair and plausible pretence of seeking to further that which is good. Hooker.

Their arms abroad with gray moss over-cast,
And their green leaves trembling with every blast.
Spenser.

3. To rate too high in computation.

The king, in his account of peace and calms, did much overcast his fortunes, which proved full of broken seas, tides, and tempests. Bacon.

To OVERCHARGE. v. a. [over and charge.]

1. To oppress; to cloy; to surcharge.

On air we feed in every instant, and on meats
but at times; and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppress and over-charge nature,
maketh her to sink unawares in the mid-way.
Raleigh.

A man may as well expect to grow stronger by always eating, as wiser by always reading. Too much over-charges nature, and turns more into disease than nourishment. Collier.

2. To load; to crowd too much.

Our language is over-charged with consonants.
Pope.

3. To burden.

He whispers to his pillow
The secrets of his over-charged soul. Shakspeare.

Here's Glo'ster, a foe to citizens,
O'er-charging your free purses with large fines.
Shakspeare.

5. To fill too full.

Her heart is but o'er-charg'd; she will recover.
Shakspeare.

The fumes of passion do as really intoxicate, and confound the judging and discerning faculty, as the fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brain of a man over-charged with it. South.

If they would make distinct abstract ideas of all the varieties in human actions, the number must be infinite, and the memory over-charged to little purpose. Locke.

The action of the Iliad and Æneid, in themselves exceeding short, are so beautifully extended by the invention of episodes, that they make up an agreeable story sufficient to employ the memory without over-charging it. Addison.

6. To load with too great a charge.

They were
As cannons over-charg'd with double cracks.
Shakspeare.

Who in deep mines, for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns o'er-charg'd, breaks, misses, or recoils.
Denham.

We may out-run
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by over-running. Shakspeare.

Ahimaz ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Cush. 2 Samuel.

Galileus noteth, that if an open trough, wherein water is, be driven faster than the water can follow, the water gathereth upon an heap towards the hinder end, where the motion began; which he supposeth, holding the motion of the earth to be the cause of the ebbing and flowing of the ocean; because the earth over-runnetb the water. Bacon.

3. To overspread; to cover all over.

With an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place. Nabum.

This disposition of the parts of the earth, shews us the foot-steps of some kind of ruin which happened in such a way, that at the same time a general flood of waters would necessarily over-run the whole earth. Burnet.

His tears defac'd the surface of the well,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'er-run with wrinkles and deform'd with tears. Addison.

4. To mischief by great numbers; to pester.

To flatter foolish men into a hope of life where there is none, is much the same with betraying people into an opinion, that they are in a virtuous and happy state, when they are over-run with passion, and drowned in their lusts. L'Estrange.

Were it not for the incessant labours of this industrious animal, Egypt would be over-run with crocodiles. Addison.

Such provision made, that a country should not want springs as were convenient for it; nor be over-run with them, and afford little or nothing else; but a supply every where suitable to the necessities of each climate and region of the globe. Woodward.

1. The state of being turned upside down.
2. Ruin; destruction.

Of those christian oratories, the overthrow and ruin is desired, not by infidels, pagans, or Turks, but by a special refined sect of christian believers.
Hooker.

They return again into Florida, to the murder and overthrow of their own countrymen. Abbot.

I serve my mortal foe,
The man who caus'd my country's overthrow.
Dryden.

3. Defeat; discomfiture.

From without came to mine eyes the blow,
Whereto mine inward thoughts did faintly yield;
Both these conspir'd poor reason's overthrow;
False in myself, thus have I lost the field. Sidney.

Quiet soul, depart;
For I have seen our enemies overthrow. Shakspeare.
From these divers Scots feared more harm by victory than they found among their enemies by their overthrow. Hayward.

Poor Hannibal is maul'd,
The theme is giv'n, and strait the council's call'd,
Whether he should to Rome directly go,
To reap the fruit of the dire overthrow? Dryden.

4. Degradation.

His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little. Shakspeare.

OVERTHROWER. n. f. [from overthrow.]

He who overthrows.

OVERTHWART. adj. [over and thwart.]

We whisper, for fear our overthwart neighbours
Should hear us, and betray us to the government.
Dryden.

2. Crossing any thing perpendicularly.

3. Perverse; adverse; contradictory; cross.

Two or three acts disposed them to cross and oppose any proposition; and that overthwart humour was discovered to rule in the breasts of many.
Clarendon.

OVERTHWART. prep. Across: as, he laid a plank overthwart the brook. This is the original use.

OVERTHWARTLY. adv. [from overthwart.]

1. Across; transversely.

The brawn of the thigh shall appear, by drawing small hair strokes from the hip to the knee, shadowed again overthwartly. Peacham on Drawing.

2. Pervicaciously; perversely.

overtake.

To OVERTOP. v. a. [over and top.]

1. To rise above; to raise the head above.

Pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
T' overtop old Pelion or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakspeare.

In the dance the graceful goddess leads
The quire of nymphs, and overtops their heads.
Dryden.

2. To excel; to surpass.

Who ever yet
Have stood to charity, and display'd th' effects
Of disposition gentle, and of wisdom
O'ertopping woman's power. Shakspeare.

As far as the soul overtops the body, so far its pains, or rather mournful sensations, exceed those of the carcase. Harvey.

3. To obscure; to make of less importance by superiour excellence.

Whereas he had been heretofore an arbiter of Europe, he should now grow less, and be over- topped by so great a conjunction. Bacon.

One whom you love,
Had champion kill'd, or trophy won,
Rather than thus be over-topt,
Wou'd you not wish his laurels cropt? Swift.

To OVERTRI'P. v. a. [over and trip.] To trip over; to walk lightly over.

In such a night,
Did Thibbe fearfully overtrip the dew,
And saw the lion's shadow ere himself,
And ran dismay'd away. Shakspeare.

O'VERTURE. n. f. [overture, French.]

1. Opening; disclosure; discovery.

I wish
You had only in your silent judgment try'd it, Without more overture. Shakspeare.

2. Proposal; something offered to consideration.

Mac Murugh moved Henry to invade Ireland, and made an overture unto him for obtaining of the foreign lordship thereof. Davies on Ireland.

All these fair overtures, made by men well esteemed for honest dealing, could not take place. Hayward.

We with open breast Stand ready to receive them, if they like
Our overture, and turn not back perverse. Milton.
Withstand the overtures of ill, and be intent and serious in good. Fell.

The earl of Pembroke, who abhorred the war, promoted all overtures towards accommodation with great importunity. Clarendon.

If a convenient supply offers itself to be seized by force or gained by fraud, human nature persuades us to hearken to the inviting overture. Rogers.

Suppose five hundred men proposing, debating, and voting according to their own little or much reason, abundance of indigested and abortive, many pernicious and foolish overtures would arise. Swift.

To OVERTURN. v. a. [over and turn.]

1. To throw down; to topple down; to subvert; to ruin.

He is wise in heart and mighty in strength—which removeth the mountains, and overturneth them in his anger. Job.

These will sometimes overturn, and sometimes swallow up towns, and make a general confusion in nature. Burnet.

This he obviates, by saying we see all the ideas in God; which is an answer to this objection, but such an one as overturns his whole hypothesis, and renders it useless, and as unintelligible as any of those he has laid aside. Locke.

But he comes round about again, and overturns
every stone that he had laid. Lesley.

If we will not encourage publick works of beneficence, till we are secure that no storm shall overturn what we help to build; there is no room left for charity. Atterbury.

A monument of deathless fame,
A woman's hand overturns. Rowe.

2. To overpower; to conquer.

Pain excessive overturns all patience. Milton.

OVERTURNER. n. f. [from overturn.] Subverter.

I have brought before you a robber of the publick treasure, an overturner of law and justice, and the destruction of the Sicilian province. Swift.

To OVERVALUE. v. a. [over and value.]

To rate at too high a price.

We have just cause to stand in some fear, lest by thus overvaluing their sermons they make the price and estimation of scripture, otherwise notified, to fall. Hooker.

To overvalue human power is likewise an argument of human weakness. Holyday.

To OVERVEIL. v. a. [over and veil.] To cover.

The day begins to break, and night is fled;
Whose pitchy mantle overveil'd the earth.
Shakspeare.

To OVERVOTE. v. a. [over and vote.] To conquer by plurality of votes.

The lords and commons might be content to be overvoted by the major part of both houses, when they had used each their own freedom. K. Charles.

To OVERWATCH. v. n. [over and watch.]
To subdue with long want of rest.

Morpheus is dispatch'd;
Which done, the lazy monarch overwatch'd,
Down from his propping elbow drops his head,
Dissolv'd in sleep, and shrinks within his bed.
Dryden.

OVERWATCHED. adj. Tired with too much watching.

While the dog hunted in the river, he had withdrawn himself to pacify with sleep his over-watched eyes. Sidney.

OVERWEAK. adj. [over and weak.] Too weak; too feeble.

Paternal persuasions, after mankind began to forget the original giver of life, became in all overweak to resist the first inclination of evil; or after, when it became habitual, to constrain it. Raleigh.

To OVERWEARY. v. a. [over and weary.]
To subdue with fatigue.

Might not Palinurus fall asleep and into the sea, having been over-wearyed with watching? Dryden.

To OVERWEATHER. v. a. [over and weather.] To batter by violence of weather.

How like a younker or a prodigal,
The scarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind?
How like the prodigal doth she return,
With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails,
Lean rent, and beggar'd by the trumpet wind.
Shakspeare.

To OVERWEEN. v. n. [over and ween.]

1. To think too highly; to think with arrogance.

2. To reach beyond the truth of any thing in thought; especially in the opinion of a man's self. Hanmer.

Oft have I seen a hot overweening cur,
Run back and bite, because he was with-held.
Shakspeare.

My master hath sent for me, to whose feeling sorrows I might be some alay, or I overween to think so. Shakspeare.

Lash hence these overweening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives.

My eye's too quick, my heart overweens too much,
Unless my hand and strength could equal them.
Shakspeare.

Take heed of overweening, and compare
Thy peacock's feet with thy gay peacock's train;
Study the best and highest things that are,
But of thyself an humble thought retain. Davies.

They that overween
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee. Milton.

Satan might have learnt
Less overweening, since he fail'd in Job,
Whose constant perseverance overcame
Whate'er his cruel malice could invent. Milton.

No man is so bold, rash, and overweening of his own works, as an ill painter and a bad poet.
Dryden.

Enthusiasm, though founded neither on reason nor revelation, but rising from the conceits of a warmed or overweening brain, works more powerfully on the persuasions and actions of men, than either or both together. Locke.

Men of fair minds and not given up to the over- weening of self-flattery, are frequently guilty of it; and, in many cases, one with amazement hears the arguings, and is astonished at the obstinacy, of a worthy man who yields not to the evidence of reason.
Locke.

Now enters overweening pride,
And scandal ever gaping wide. Swift.

OVERWEENINGLY. adv. [from over- ween.] With too much arrogance; with too high an opinion.

To OVERWEIGH. v. a. [over and weigh.]
To preponderate.

Sharp and subtle discourses of wit, procure many times very great applause, but being laid in the balance with that which the habit of sound experience delivereth, they are overweighed. Hooker.

 My unfoild name, th' austerenels of my life,
 Will so your accusation overweigh,
 That you shall stifle in your own report. Shaksp.
OVERWEIGHT. n. f. [over and weight.] Preponderance.
 Sinking into water is but an overweight of the body, in respect of the water. Bacon.
TO OVERWHELM. v. a. [over and whelm.]
 1. To crush underneath something violent and weighty.
 What age is this, where honest men,
 Plac'd at the helm,
 A sea of some foul mouth or pen,
 Shall overwhelm? Ben Jonson.
 Back do I tofs these treasons to thy head,
 With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart. Shaksp.
 How trifling an apprehension is the shame of being laughed at by fools, when compared with that everlasting shame and astonishment which shall overwhelm the sinner, when he shall appear before the tribunal of Christ? Rogers.
 Blind they rejoice, though now even now they fall;
 Death hastes amain; one hour o'erwhelms them all. Pope.
 2. To overlook gloomily.
 Let the brow o'erwhelm it,
 As fearfully as doth a galled rock
 O'erhang and jutty his confounded base. Shaksp.
 An apothecary late I noted,
 In tatter'd weeds with overwhelming brows,
 Culling of simples. Shaksp.
OVERWHELMINGLY. adv. [from overwhelm.] In such a manner as to overwhelm. Inelegant, and not in use.
 Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin, nor impertinently betray their souls to ruin for that which they call light and trivial; which is so indeed in respect of the acquit, but overwhelmingly ponderous in regard of the pernicious consequences. Decay of Piety.
OVERWISE. adj. [over and wise.] Wise to affectation.
 Make not thyself overwise. Ecclesiasticus.
OVERWORN. part. [over and worn.]

 The jealous o'erworn widow and herself,
 Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shaksp.
OVERWROUGHT. part. [over and wrought.]
 1. Labour'd too much.
 Apelles said of Protogenes, that he knew not when to give over. A work may be overwrought, as well as underwrought: too much labour often takes the spirit, by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden.
 2. Worked all over.
 Of Gothick structure was the northern side,
O'erwrought with ornaments of barbarous pride. Pope.
 3. It has in Shakspere a sense which I know not well how to reconcile to the original meaning of the word, and therefore conclude it misprinted for overraught; that is, overreached or cheated.
 By some device or other,
 The villain is o'erwrought of all my money:
 They say this town is full of cozenage. Two Gentlemen of Verona.
OVERYEA'RED. adj. [over and year.] Too old.
 Among them dwelt
 A maid, whose fruit was ripe, not overyear'd. Fairfax.
OVERZEALOUS. adj. [over and zealous.] Too zealous.
 It is not of such weighty necessity to determine one way or the other, as some overzealous for or against the immateriality of the soul, have been forward to make the world believe. Locke.

OUGHT. n. f. [aphit, that is, a whit, Sax.] This word is therefore more properly written ought. See AUGHT.] Any thing; not nothing.
 For ought that I can understand, there is no part but the bare English pale, in which the Irish have not the greatest footing. Spenser on Ireland.
 He asked him if he saw ought. Mark.
 To do ought good never will be our task;
 But ever to do ill our sole delight. Milton.
 Universal Lord! be bounteous still
 To give us only good; and if the night
 Have gather'd ought of evil, or conceal'd, Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark. Milton.
OUGHT. verb imperfect; in the second person oughtest. [This word the etymologists make the preterit of owe, but it has often a present signification.]
 1. [preterit of owe.] Owed; was bound to pay; have been indebted.
 Apprehending the occasion, I will add a continuance to that happy motion, and besides give you some tribute of the love and duty I long have ought you. Spelman.
 This blood which men by treason fought,
 That followed, sir, which to myself I ought. Dryd.
 2. To be obliged by duty.
 Know how thou oughtest to behave. Timothy.
 Speak boldly as I ought to speak. Epheians.
 She acts just as she ought,
 But never, never reach'd one gen'rous thought. Pope.
 Judges ought to remember, that their office is to interpret the law, and not to make or give law. Bacon.
 We ought to profess our dependance upon him, and our obligations to him for the good things we enjoy. We ought to publish to the world our sense of his goodness with the voice of praise, and tell of all his wondrous works. We ought to comfort his servants and children in their afflictions, and relieve his poor distressed members in their manifold necessities, for he that giveth alms, sacrificeth praise. Nelson.
 3. To be fit; to be necessary.
 These things ought not so to be. James.
 If grammar ought to be taught, it must be to one that can speak the language already. Locke.
 4. Applied to persons it has a sense not easily explained. To be fit, or necessary that he should.
Ought not Christ to have suffered? Luke.
 5. Ought is both of the present and past tenses, and of all persons except the second singular.
O'VIFORM. adj. [ovum and forma, Latin.] Having the shape of an egg.
 This notion of the mundane egg, or that the world was oviform, hath been the sense and language of all antiquity. Burnet.
OVI'PAROUS. adj. [ovum and pario, Latin.] Bringing forth eggs; not viviparous.
 That fishes and birds should be oviparous, is a plain sign of providence. More.
 Birds and oviparous creatures have eggs enough at first conceived in them to serve them for many years laying. Ray.
OUNCE. n. f. [once, Fr. uncia, Latin.] A name of weight of different value in different denominations of weight. In troy weight, an ounce is twenty pennyweights; a pennyweight twenty-four grains.
 The blood he hath lost,
 Which I dare vouch is more than that he hath
 By many an ounce, he dropt it for his country. Shaksp.
 A sponge dry weigheth one ounce twenty-six grains; the same sponge being wet, weigheth fourteen ounces six drams and three quarters. Bacon.
OUNCE. n. f. [once, French; onza, Spanish.] A lynx; a panther.

OU'PHEN. adj. [from ouphe.] Elfish.
 Fairies, black, gray, green, and white,
 Ye moon-shine revellers and shades of night,
 You ouphen heirs of fixed destiny,
 Attend your office. Shaksp.
OUR. pron. poss. [unc, Sax.]
 1. Pertaining to us; belonging to us.
 You shall Lead our first battle, brave Macduff, and we Shall take upon us what else remains. Shaksp.
 Our wit is given almighty God to know,
 Our will is given to love him being known;
 But God could not be known to us below,
 But by his works which through the sense are shown.
 So in our little world this soul of ours
 Being only one, and to one body ty'd,
 Doth use on divers objects divers powers,
 And so are her effects diversify'd. Davies.
 Our soul is the very same being it was yesterday,
 last year, twenty years ago. Beattie.

Rankled so sore and festered inwardly,
Till that the truth thereof I did out-wrest. Spenser.

OUTWROUGHT. part. [out and wrought.] Outdone; exceeded in efficacy.

OWE

In your violent acts,
The fall of torrents and the noise of tempests,
The boiling of Carybdis, the sea's wildness,
The eating force of flames, and wings of winds,
Be all out-wrought by your transcendent furies. Ben Jonson.

To OUTWORTH. v. a. [out and worth.] To excel in value.

A beggar's book
Out-worths a noble's blood. Shakespeare.

To OWE. v. a. [eg, aa, I owe, or I ought, Islandick.]

1. To be obliged to pay; to be indebted.

I owe you much, and, like a witless youth,
That which I owe is lost. Shakespeare.
Let none seek needless causes to approve
The faith they owe. Milton.

A son owes help and honour to his father; and is a subject less indebted to the king? Holyday.

All your parts of pious duty done,
You owe your Ormond nothing but a son. Dryden.
Thou hast deserv'd more love than I can show,
But 'tis thy fate to give, and mine to owe. Dryden.

If, upon the general balance of trade, English merchants owe to foreigners one hundred thousand pounds, if commodities do not, our money must go out to pay it. Locke.

2. To be obliged to ascribe; to be obliged for.

By me upheld, that he may know how frail
His fall'n condition is, and to me owe
All his deliverance, and to none but me. Milton.

3. To have from any thing as the consequence of a cause.

O deem thy fall not ow'd to man's decree,
Jove hated Greece and punish'd Greece in thee. Pope.

4. To possess; to be the right owner of. For owe, which is, in this sense, obsolete, we now use own.

Thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow'st not, and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy. Shakespeare.

Fate, shew thy force; ourselves we do not owe;
What is decreed must be; and be this so. Shakespeare.

Not poppy nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou owdest yesterday. Shakespeare.

If any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer. Crashaw.

OWING. part. [from owe. A practice has long prevailed among writers, to use owing, the active participle of owe, in a passive sense, for owed or due. Of this impropriety some writers were aware, and having no quick sense of the force of English words, have used due, in the sense of consequence or imputation, which by other writers is only used of debt. We say, the money is due to me; they say likewise, the effect is due to the cause.]

1. Consequential.

This was owing to an indifference to the pleasures of life, and an aversion to the pomps of it. Atterbury.

2. Due as a debt. Here due is undoubtedly the proper word.

You are both too bold;
I'll teach you all what's owing to your queen. Dryden.

The debt, owing from one country to the other, cannot be paid without real effects sent thither to that value. Locke.

3. Imputable to, as an agent.

If we estimate things, what in them is owing to nature, and what to labour we shall find in most of them $\frac{9}{10}$ to be on the account of labour. Locke.

The custom of particular impeachments was not limited any more than that of struggles between nobles and commons; the ruin of Greece was owing to the former, as that of Rome was to the latter. Swift.

OWL. } n. s. [ule, Sax. bulote, Fr. and O'WLET. } Scottish.] A bird that flies about in the night and catches mice.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing
For a charm. Shakespeare.

Return to her!
No! rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl. Shakespeare.

'Twas when the dog-star's unpropitious ray Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd every bay;
Sick was the sun, the owl forsook his bow'r. Dunciad.

Then lady Cynthia, mistress of the shade,
Goes, with the fashionable owls, to bed. Young.

O'WLER. n. s. One who carries contraband goods: in the legal sense, one that carries out wool illicitly. Perhaps from the necessity of carrying on an illicit trade by night: but rather, I believe, a corruption of wooller, by a colloquial neglect of the w, such as is often observed in woman, and by which goodwife is changed to goody. Wooller, ooller, owler.
By running goods, these graceless owlers gain. Swift.

We understand by some owlers, old people die in France. Taylor.

OWN. n. s. [agen, Sax. eygen, Dutch.]

1. This is a word of no other use than as it is added to the possessive pronouns, my, thy, his, our, your, their. It seems to be a substantive; as, my own, my peculiar: but is, in reality, the participle passive of the verb owe, in the participle owen or own; my own; the thing owned by, or belonging to me.

Inachus in his cave alone,
Wept not another's losses, but his own. Dryden.

2. It is added generally by way of emphasis or corroboration.

I yet never was forsworn,
Scarcely have coveted what was my own. Shakespeare.
Every nation made gods of their own, and put them in high places. 2 Kings.

For my own share one beauty I design,
Engage your honours that she shall be mine. Dryden.
It is conceit rather than understanding, if it must be under the restraint of receiving and holding opinions by the authority of any thing but their own perceived evidence. Locke.

Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn,
And knit thee gloves made of her own spun yarn? Gay.

Passion and pride were to her soul unknown,
Convinc'd that virtue only is our own. Pope.

3. Sometimes it is added to note opposition or contradistinction; domestick; not foreign; mine, his, or yours; not another's.

These toils abroad, these tumults with his own, Fell in the revolution of one year. Daniel.
There's nothing sillier than a crafty knave out-witted, and beaten at his own play. L'Estrange.

To OWN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To acknowledge; to avow for one's own.

When you come, find me out,
And own me for your son. Dryden.

2. To possess; to claim; to hold by right.

Tell me, ye Trojans, for that name you own;
Nor is your course upon our coasts unknown. Dryden.
Others on earth o'er human race preside,
Of these the chief, the care of nations own,
And guard with arms divine the British throne. Pope.

3. To avow.

Nor hath it been thus only amongst the more civilized nations; but the barbarous Indians likewise have owned that tradition. Wilkins.

OX

I'll venture out alone,
Since you, fair prince, my protection own. Dryd.
4. To confess; not to deny.
Make this truth so evident, that those who are unwilling to own it may yet be ashamed to deny it.
Tilloison.
Others will own their weakness of understanding.
Lacke.
It must be owned, that, generally speaking, good parents are never more fond of their daughters, than when they see them too fond of themselves.
Larw.
O'WNER. n. f. [from own.] One to whom any thing belongs; master; rightful possessor.
A bark
Stays but till her owner come aboard. Shakspeare.
It is not enough to break into my garden;
Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner,
But thou wilt brave me. Shakspeare.
Here shew favour, because it happeneth that the owner hath incurred the forfeiture of eight years profit of his lands, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process against him. Bacon.
They intend advantage of my labours,
With no small profit daily to my owners. Milton.
These wait the owners last despair,
And what's permitted to the flames invade. Dryden.
A freehold, though but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison.
That small muscle draws the nose upwards, when it expresses the contempt which the owner of it has upon seeing any thing he does not like. Speetator.
Victory hath not made us insolent, nor have we taken advantage to gain any thing beyond the honour of restoring every one's right to their just owners.
Atterbury.
What is this wit, which must our cares employ?
The owner's wife, that other men enjoy. Pope.
O'WNERSHIP. n. f. [from owner.] Property; rightful possession.

Danish.]
1. The general name for black-cattle.
The black ox hath not trod on his foot. Camden.
Sheep ran not half so tim'rous from the wolf,
Or horse or oxen from the leopard,
As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves. Shakspeare.
I saw the river Clitumnus, celebrated by the poets for making cattle white that drink of it. The inhabitants of that country have still the same opinion, and have a great many oxen of a whitish colour to confirm them in it. Addison.

OX Y

2. A castrated bull.
The horns of oxen and cows are larger than the bulls; which is caused by abundance of moisture.
Bacon.
Although there be naturally more males than females, yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen, and weathers, there are fewer. Graunt.
The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough. Dryden.
The frowning bull
And ox half-raised. Thomson's Summer.

duction to any proclamation or advertisement given by the publick criers both in England and Scotland. It is thrice repeated.
Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
Attend your office and your quality.
Crier hobgoblin make the fairy O yes. Shakspeare.
O yes! if any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry;
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag. Crasbaw.
OY'LETHOLE. n. f. See EYELET. [It may be written oylet, from ocillet, Fr.
but eyelet seems better.]
Distinguish'd flashes deck the great,
As each excels in birth or state;
His oyletholes are more and ampler,
The king's own body was a samplar. Prior.
O'YSTER. n. f. [oyster, Dut. buitre, Fr.] A bivalve testaceous fish.
I will not lend thee a penny.—
Why then the world's mine oyster, which I with sword will open. Shakspeare.
Rich honesty dwells like your miser, fir, in a poor house; as your pearl in your foul oyster.
Shakspeare.
Another mass held a kind of oyster shell, and other bivalve. Woodward.
There may be many ranks of beings in the invisible world as superior to us, as we are superior to all the ranks of being in this visible world; though we descend below the oyster to the least animated atoms discovered by microscopes. Watts.
Where oyster tubs in rows
Are rang'd beside the posts, there stay thy haste.
Gay.
O'YSTERWENCH. } n. f. [oyster and wench, O'YSTERWOMAN. } or woman.] A woman

P A C

with his eyes sometimes cast up to heaven, as though his fancies strove to mount higher. Sidney.
He saw Menalcas come with heavy pace;
Wet were his eyes, and chearless was his face. Addison.
3. Degree of celerity. To keep or hold pace, is not to be left behind.
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusky death. Shakspeare.
Bring me word
How the world goes, that to the pace of it
I may spur on my journey. Shakspeare.

is to fall into confidence with Spain. Temple.

5. A measure of five feet. The quantity supposed to be measured by the foot from the place where it is taken up to that where it is set down.

Measuring land by walking over it, they styled a double step; i. e. the space from the elevation of one foot, to the same foot set down again, mediated by a step of the other foot; a pace equal to five foot; a thousand of which paces made a mile. Holder on Time.

The violence of tempests never moves the sea above six paces deep. Wilkins.

6. A particular movement which horses are taught, though some have it naturally, made by lifting the legs on the same side together.

They rode, but authors having not Determin'd whether pace or trot;
That's to say, whether tollutation,
As they do term it, or succussion. Hudibras.

To PACE, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To move on slowly.

He soft arrived on the grassie plain,
And fairly paced forth with easy pain. Spenser.

As we pac'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches, Methought, that Glo'ster stumbled. Shakspeare.

I beheld
Crispinus, both in birth and manner vile,
Pacing in pomp with cloak of Tyrian dye,
Chang'd oft a day. Dryden.

The moon rose in the clearest sky I ever saw, by whose solemn light I paced on slowly without interruption. Pope.

The nymph, obedient to divine command,
To seek Ulysses, pac'd along the sand. Pope.

2. To move.

Remember well, with speed so pace,
To speak of Perdita. Shakspeare.

lain, chusing him, because he was a churchman, as best sorting with an embassy of pacification. Bacon.

David, by an happy and seasonable pacification, was took off from acting that bloody tragedy. South.

2. The act of appeasing or pacifying.

A world was to be saved by a pacification of wrath, through the dignity of that sacrifice which should be offered. Hooker.

PACIFICA'TOR, n. s. [pacificateur, Fr. from pacify.] Peacemaker.

He set and kept on foot a continual treaty of peace; besides he had in consideration the bearing the blessed person of a pacifactor. Bacon.

PACIFICATORY, adj. [from pacifactor.]
Tending to make peace.

PACIFICK, adj. [pacifique, Fr. pacifique, Lat.] Peace making; mild; gentle; appeasing.

God now in his gracious pacifick manner comes to treat with them. Hammond.

Returning, in his bill
An olive leaf he brings, pacifick sign! Milton.

PA'CIFIER, n. s. [from pacify.] One who pacifies.

To PA'CIFY, v. a. [pacifier, Fr. pacifico, Lat.] To appease; to still resentment;
to quiet an angry person; to compose any desire.

While the dog hunted in the river, he had withdrawn to pacify with sleep his over-watched eyes. Sidney.

Menelaus promised Ptolemy money, if he would pacify the king. 2 Maccabees.

The Most High is not pacified for sin by the multitude of sacrifices. Ecclesiasticus.

In his journey he heard news of the victory, yet he went on as far as York, to pacify and settle those countries. Bacon.

O villain! to have wit at will upon all other occasions, and not one diverting syllable now at a pinch to pacify our mistrefs. E'strange.

Nor William's pow'r, nor Mary's charms,
Could or repel, or pacify his arms. Prior.

PACK, n. s. [pack, Dutch.]

1. A large bundle of any thing tied up for carriage.

Themistocles said to the king of Persia, that speech was like cloth of Arras, opened and put abroad, whereby the imagery appears in figures;
whereas in thoughts they lie but as in packs. Bacon.

Had fly Ulysses at the sack
Of Troy, brought thee his pedlar's pack. Cleavel.

Our knight did bear no less a pack
Of his own buttocks on his back. Hudibras.

2. A burden; a load.

I rather chose,
To cross my friend in his intended drift,
Than, by concealing it, heap on your head
A pack of sorrows. Shakspeare.

But when they took notice how stupid a beast it was, they loaded it with packs and burdens, and set boys upon the back of it. L'Estrange.

3. A due number of cards.

Women to cards may be compar'd, we play
A round or two, when us'd we throw away,
Take a fresh pack. Granville.

It is wonderful to see persons of sense passing away a dozen hours together in shuffling and dividing a pack of cards. Addison.

4. A number of hounds hunting together.

Two ghosts join their packs to hunt her o'er the plain. Dryden.

The fury fires the pack; they snuff, they vent,
And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent. Dryden.

Each saddled with his burden on his back. Dryden.

What we looked upon as brains, were an heap of strange materials, packed up with wonderful art in the skull. Addison.

2. To send in a hurry.

He cannot live, I hope, and must not die,
Till George be pack'd with post horse up to heav'n. Shakspeare.

3. To sort the cards so as that the game shall be iniquitously secured. It is applied to any iniquitous procurement of collusion.

Enos has Pack'd cards with Caesar, and false play'd. Shakspeare.

There be that can pack cards and yet cannot play well; so there are some that are good in canvasses and factions, that are otherwise weak men. Bacon's Essays.

The judge shall jobb, the bishop bite the town,
And mighty dukes pack cards for half a crown. Pope.

4. To unite picked persons in some bad design.

When they have pack'd a parliament,
We'll once more try th' expedient:
Who can already muster friends,
To serve for members to our ends. Hudibras.

Brutes, called men, in full cry pack'd by the court or country, run down in the house of commons, a deserted horned beast of the court. Wycheley.

So many greater fools than they,
Will pack a crowded audience the third day. Southern.

The expected council was dwindling into a con-venticle; a pack'd assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convention of fathers from all quarters. Atterbury.

To PACK, v. n.

PA'DDER. n. f. [from pad.] A robber; a foot highwayman.
Spurr'd as jockies use, to break,
Or padders to secure a neck. Hudibras.
Worse than all the clatt'ring tiles, and worse
Than thousand padders, is the poet's curse;
Rogues that in dog days cannot rhyme forbear;
But without mercy read, to make you hear. Dryd.
If he advanced himself by a voluntary engaging in unjust quarrels, he has no better pretence to honour than what a resolute and successful padder may challenge. Collier.

To PA'DDLE. v. n. [patouiller, Fr.]
1. To row; to beat water, as with oars.
As the men were paddling for their lives. L'Estrange.
Paddling ducks the standing lake desire. Gay.

2. To play in the water.

To PAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To mark the pages of a book.
2. To attend as a page.
Will these moss'd trees
That have out-liv'd the eagle, page thy heels,
And skip when thou point'st out? Shakspeare.

PA'GEANT. n. f. [Of this word the etymologists give no satisfactory account. It may perhaps be payen geant, a pagan giant, a representation of triumph used at return from holy wars; as we have yet the Saracen's head.]
1. A statue in a show.

2. Any show; a spectacle of entertainment.

When all our pageants of delight were plaid,
Our youth got me to play the woman's part,
And I was trimm'd in madam Julia's gown.
Shakspeare.
I'll play my part in fortune's pageant.
Shakspeare.

This wide and universal theatre,
Presents more woful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play.
Shakspeare.

Strange and unnatural, let's stay and see
This pageant of a prodigy.
Cowley.

The poets contrived the following pageant or machine for the pope's entertainment; a huge flaming mountain that was split in the top in imitation of Parnassus.
Addison.

3. It is used in a proverbial and general sense for any thing showy without stability or duration.

Thus unlamented pass the proud away,
The gaze of fools, and pageant of a day.
Pope.

The breath of others raises our renown,
Our own as soon blows the pageant down.
Young.

PAGEANT. adj. Showy; pompous; osten-tationous; superficial.

Were she ambitious, she'd disdain to own
The pageant pomp of such a servile throne.
Dryd.

To PAGEANT. v. a. [from the noun.] To exhibit in show; to represent.

With ridiculous and awkward action,
Which, slanderer, he imitation calls,
He pageants us.
Shakspeare.

PAGEANTRY. n. s. [from pageant.] Pomp;
show.

Inconveniences are consequent to dogmatizing, supposing men in the right; but if they be in the wrong, what a ridiculous pageantry it is to see such a philosophical gravity set man out a solecism.
Government of the Tongue.

Such pageantry be to the people shown;
There boast thy horse's trappings and thy own.
Dryden.

PA'GINAL. adj. [pagina, Lat.] Consisting of pages.

An expression proper unto the paginal books of our times, but not so agreeable unto volumes or rolling books, in use among the Jews.
Brown.

They never hide or palliate their vices, but expose them freely to view. Swift.

2. To extenuate; to soften by favourable representations.

The fault is to extenuate, palliate, and indulge.
Dryden.

3. To cure imperfectly or temporally, not radically; to ease, not cure.

PALLIATION, n. f. [palliation, Fr. from palliate.]

1. Extenuation; alleviation; favourable representation.

I saw clearly through all the pious disguises and soft palliations of some men. King Charles.
Such bitter invectives against other men's faults,
2 I

and indulgence or palliation of their own, shews their zeal lies in their spleen. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. Imperfect or temporary, not radical cure; mitigation, not cure.
If the just cure of a disease be full of peril, let the physician resort to palliation. Bacon.

PALLIATIVE. adj. [palliatif, Fr. from palliate.]
1. Extenuating; favourably representative.
2. Mitigating, not removing; temporarily or partially, not radically curative.
Consumption pulmonary seldom admits of other than a palliative cure, and is generally incurable when hereditary. Arbutnot.

PALLIATIVE. n. s. [from palliate.] Something mitigating; something alleviating.
It were more safe to trust to the general aversion of our people against this coin, than apply those palliatives which weak, perfidious, or abject politicians administer. Swift.

PALLID. adj. [pallidus, Lat.] Pale; not highcoloured; not bright: pallid is seldom used of the face.
Of every sort, which in that meadow grew,
They gather'd some; the violet pallid blue. Spenser.
When from the pallid sky the sun descends. Thomson.
Whilst, on the margin of the beaten road,
Its pallid bloom sick-smelling hen-bane shew'd. Harte.

PALLMALL. n. s. [pila and malleus, Lat. pale maille, Fr.] A play in which the ball is struck with a mallet through an iron ring.

PALM. n. s. [palma, Lat. palmier, Fr.]
1. A tree of great variety of species; of which the branches were worn in token of victory: it therefore implies superiority.
There are twenty-one species of this tree, of which the most remarkable are, the greater palm or date-tree. The dwarf palm grows in Spain, Portugal, and Italy, from whence the leaves are sent hither and made into flag-brooms. The oily palm is a native of Guinea and Cape Verd island, but has been transplanted to Jamaica and Barbadoes. It grows as high as the main mast of a ship. Miller.
Get the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm alone. Shakspeare.
Nothing better proveth the excellency of this soil, than the abundant growing of the palm-trees without labour of man. This tree alone giveth unto man whatsoever his life beggeth at nature's hand. Raleigh.
Above others who carry away the palm for excellence, is Maurice landgrave of Hesse. Peacbam.
Fruits of palm-tree, pleasantest to thirst
And hunger both. Milton.
Thou youngest virgin, daughter of the skies,
Whose palms new pluck'd from paradise,
With spreading branches more sublimely rise. Dryden.

2. Victory; triumph. [palme, Fr.]
Namur subdu'd is England's palm alone;
The rest besieg'd, but we contrain'd the town. Dryden.

3. The hand spread out; the inner part of the hand. [palma, Lat.]
By this virgin palm now kissing thine,
I will be thine. Shakspeare.
Drinks of extreme thin parts fretting, put upon the back of your hand, will, with a little stay, pass through to the palm, and yet taste mild to the mouth. Bacon.
Seeking my success in love to know,
I try'd th' infallible prophetick way,
A poppy-leaf upon my palm to lay. Dryden.

4. A hand, or measure of length, comprising three inches. [palme, French.]
The length of a foot is a sixth part of the stature; a span one eighth of it; a palm or hand's breadth one twenty-fourth; a thumb's breadth one inch one seventy-second; a forefinger's breadth one ninety-sixth. Holder on Time.
Henry VIII. of England, Francis I. of France, and Charles V. emperor, were so provident, as scarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either, but that the other two would set the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.

The same hand into a fist may close,
Which instantly a palm expanded shows. Denham.

TO PALM. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To conceal in the palm of the hand, as jugglers.
Palming is held foul play amongst gamesters. Dryden.
They palm'd the trick that lost the game. Prior.

2. To impose by fraud.
If not by scriptures, how can we be sure,
Reply'd the panther, what tradition's pure?
For you may palm upon us new for old. Dryden.
Moll White has made the country ring with several imaginary exploits palm'd upon her. Spectator.

3. To handle.
Frank carves very ill, yet will palm all the meat. Prior.

4. To stroak with the hand. Ainsworth.

PALMER. n. s. [from palm.] A pilgrim: they who returned from the holy land carried branches of palm.
My sceptre, for a palmer's walking staff. Shakspeare.
Behold yon isle, by *palmer*s, pilgrims trod,
Men bearded, bald, cowl'd, uncowl'd, shod, unshod. Pope.

PALMERWORM. n. s. [palmer and worm.]
A worm covered with hair, supposed to be so called because he wanders over all plants.
A flesh fly, and one of those hairy worms that resemble caterpillars and are called palmerworms, being conveyed into one of our small receivers, the bee and the fly lay with their bellies upward, and the worm seemed suddenly struck dead. Boyle.

PALME'TTO. n. s. A species of the palm-tree: it grows in the West Indies to be a very large tree; with the leaves the inhabitants thatch their houses. These leaves, before they are expanded, are cut and brought into England to make women's plaited hats; and the berries of these trees were formerly much used for buttons.
Broad o'er my head the verdant cedars wave,
And high palmettos lift their graceful shade. Thomson.

PALMI'FEROUS. adj. [palma and fero, Latin.] Bearing palms. Diſt.

PALMIPED. adj. [palma and pes, Latin.] Webfooted; having the toes joined by a membrane.
It is described like fissipedes, whereas it is a palmipede or fin-footed like swans. Brown.
Water-fowl which are palmipede, are whole footed, have very long necks, and yet but short legs, as swans. Ray.

PALMIST. n. s. [from palma.] One who deals in palmistry. Diſt.

PALMISTRY. n. s. [palma, Latin.]
1. The cheat of foretelling fortune by the lines of the palm.
We shall not query what truth is in palmistry, or divination from lines of our hands of high denomination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Here while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleaveland.
With the fond maids in palmistry he deals;
They tell the secret first which he reveals. Prior.

2. Addison uses it humorously for the action of the hand.
Going to relieve a common beggar, he found his pocket was picked; that being a kind of palmistry at which this vermin are very dextrous. Spectator.

PALMY. adj. [from palm.] Bearing palms.
In the most high and palmy state of Rome,
A little ere the mightiest Julius fell,
The graves stood tenantless. Shakspeare.

She pass'd the region which Panchaea join'd,
And flying, left the palmy plains behind. Dryden.

PALPABILITY. n. s. [from palpable.]
Quality of being perceivable to the touch.
He first found out palpability of colours; and by the delicacy of his touch, could distinguish the different vibrations of the heterogeneous rays of light. Mart. Scriblerus.

PALPABLE. adj. [palpable, Fr. palpor, Latin.]
1. Perceptible by the touch.
Art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation?
I see thee yet in form as palpable,
As this which now I draw. Shakspeare.
Darkness must overshadow all his bounds,
Palpable darkness! and blot out three days. Milton.

2. Gross; coarse; easily detected.
That grosser kind of heathenish idolatry, whereby they worshipped the very works of their own hands, was an absurdity to reason so palpable, that the prophet David comparing idols and idolaters together, maketh almost no odds between them. Hooker.
They grant we err not in palpable manner, we are not openly and notoriously impious. Hooker.
He must not think to shelter himself from so palpable an absurdity, by this impertinent distinction. Tillotson.
Having no surer guide, it was no wonder that they fell into gross and palpable mistakes. Woodward.

3. Plain; easily perceptible.
That they all have so testified, I see not how we should possibly with a proof more palpable, than this manifestly received and every where continued custom of reading them publicly. Hooker.
They would no longer be content with the invisible monarchy of God, and God dismissed them to the palpable dominion of Saul. Holyday.
Since there is so much dissimilitude between cause and effect in the more palpable phenomena, we can expect no less between them and their invisible efficient. Glanville.

PALPABLENESS. n. s. [from palpable.]
Quality of being palpable; plainness; grossness.

PALPABLY. adv. [from palpable.]
1. In such a manner as to be perceived by the touch.
2. Grossly; plainly.
Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money; before they gave up their verdict, they preyed of the senate a guard, that they might do their conferences justice. Bacon.

PALPATION. n. s. [palpatio, palpor, Lat.]
The act of feeling.

TO PALPITATE. v. a. [palpito, Lat. palpiter, Fr.] To beat as the heart; to flutter; to go pit a pat.

PALPITATION. n. s. [palpitation, Fr. from palpitate.] Beating or panting: that alteration in the pulse of the heart, upon frights or any other causes, which makes it felt: for a natural uniform pulse goes on without distinction.
The heart strikes five hundred sort of pulses in an hour; and hunted into such continual palpitations, through anxiety and distraction, that soon would it break. Harvey.
I knew the good company too well to feel any palpitations at their approach. Tatler.
Anxiety and palpitations of the heart, are a sign of weak fibres. Arbutnot on Aliment.
Her bosom heaves
With palpitations wild. Thomson's Spring.

PALSGRAVE. n. s. [palsgraff, German.]
A count or earl who has the overseeing of a prince's palace. Diſt.

PALSICAL. adj. [from palsy.] Afflicted with the palsy; paralytick.

PALSIED. adj. [from palsy.] Diseased with a palsy.

P A M

Pall'd, thy blazed youth
Becomes assuaged, and doth beg the alms
Of palsied eld. Shakspeare.
Though she breathes in a few pious peaceful souls,
Like a palsied person, she scarce moves a limb.

Decay of Piety.
Let not old age long stretch his palsy'd hand;
Those who give late are importun'd each day. Gay.
PALSY. n. f. [paralysis, Lat. thence paralyfy, parafy, palafy, palsy.] A privation of motion or feeling, or both, proceeding from some cause below the cerebellum, joined with a coldness, flaccidity, and at last wasting of the parts. If this privation be in all the parts below the head, except the thorax and heart, it is called a paraplegia; if in one side only, a hemiplegia; if in some parts only of one side, a paralysis. There is a three-fold division of a palsy; a privation of motion, sensation remaining; a privation of sensation, motion remaining; and lastly, a privation of both together.

Quincy.
The palsy, and not fear, provokes me. Shakspeare.
A palsy may as well shake an oak, as shake the delight of conscience. South.

TO PALTER. v. n. [from paltron, Skinner.] To shift; to dodge; to play tricks. Not in use.

I must
To the young man send humble treaties,
And palter in the shift of lowness. Shakspeare.
Be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter with us in a double sense;
That keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope. Shakspeare.
Romans, that have spoke the word,
And will not palter. Shakspeare.

TO PALTER. v. a. To squander: as, he palters his fortune. Ainsworth.

PALTERER. n. f. [from palter.] An insincere dealer; a shifter.

PALTRINESS. n. f. [from paltry.] The state of being paltry.

PALTRY. adj. [paltron, Fr. a scoundrel; paltracco, a low whore, Italian.] Sorry; worthless; despicable; contemptible; mean.

Then turn your forces from this paltry siege,
And stir them up against a mightier task. Shakspeare.
A very dishonest paltry boy, as appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him. Shakspeare.

Whose compost is paltry and carried too late,
Such husbandry useth that many do hate. Tupper.
For knights are bound to feel no blows
From paltry and unequal foes. Hudibras.

It is an ill habit to squander away our wishes upon paltry fooleries. L'Estrange.

When such paltry slaves presume
To mix in treason, if the plot succeeds,
They're thrown neglected by; but if it fails,
They're sure to die like dogs. Addison's Cato.

PALY. adj. [from pale.] Pale. Used only in poetry.

Fain would I go to chafe his paly lips
With twenty thousand kisses. Shakspeare.

From camp to camp,
Fire answers fire, and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the others' ember'd face. Shakspeare.
A dim gleam the paly lanthorn throws
O'er the mid pavement. Gay.

PAM. n. f. [probably from palm, victory; as trump from triumph.] The knave of clubs

Ev'n mighty pam that kings and queens o'erthrew,
And mow'd down armies in the fights of lu. Pope.

TO PAMPER. v. a. [pamberare, Italian.] To glut; to fill with food; to saginate; to feed luxuriously.

It was even as two physicians should take one sick body in hand, of which the former would minister all things meet to purge and keep under the body, the other to pamper and strengthen it suddenly again; whereof what is to be looked for but a most dangerous relapse? Spenser.

P A N

You are more intemperate in your blood
Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals
That rage in savage sensuality. Shakspeare.

They are contented as well with mean food, as those that with the rarities of the earth do pamper their voracities. Sandys.

Praise swelled thee to a proportion ready to burst, it brought thee to feed upon the air, and to starve thy soul, only to pamper thy imagination. South.

With food
Distend his chine and pamper him for sport. Dryden.

His lordship lolls within at ease,
Pamp'ring his paunch with foreign rarities. Dryden.

To pamper'd insolence devoted fall
Prime of the flock and choicest of the stall. Pope.

PAMPHLET. n. f. [par un filet, Fr. Whence this word is written anciently, and by Caxton, paunflet.] A small book; properly a book sold unbound, and only stitched.

Com'st thou with deep premeditated lines,
With written pamphlets studiously devis'd? Shakspeare.
I put forth a slight pamphlet about the elements of architecture. Wotton.

Since I have been reading many English pamphlets and treatises of the sabbath I can hardly find any treatise wherein the use of the common service by the minister, and the due frequenting thereof by the people, is once named among the duties or offices of sanctifying the Lord's-day. White.

He could not, without some tax upon himself and his ministers for the not executing the laws, look upon the bold licence of some in printing pamphlets. Clarendon.

As when some writer in a publick cause,
His pen, to save a sinking nation, draws,
While all is calm, his arguments prevail,
Till pow'r discharging all her stormy bags,
Flutters the feeble pamphlet into rags. Swift.

TO PAMPHLET. v. n. [from the noun.] To write small books.

I put pen to paper, and something I have done, though in a poor pamphletting way. Howell.

PAMPHLETEER. n. f. [from pamphlet.] A scribbler of small books.

The squibs are those who in the common phrase are called libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers. Tatler.

With great injustice I have been pelted by pamphleteers. Swift.

TO PAN. v. a. An old word denoting to close or join together. Ainsworth.

PAN. n. f. [ponne, Saxon.]

1. A vessel broad and shallow, in which provisions are dressed or kept.

This were but to leap out of the pan into the fire. Spenser.

The pliant brads is laid
On anvils, and of head and limbs are made, Pans, cans. Dryden.

PANCAKE. n. f. [pan and cake.] Thin pudding baked in the fryingpan.

A certain knight swore by his honour they were good pancakes, and swore by his honour the mustard was naught. Shakspeare.

The flour makes a very good pancake; mixed with a little wheat flour. Mortimer.

P A N

PANCRATICAL. adj. [παν and κρατος.] Excelling in all the gymnastick exercises.

He was the most pancratical man of Greece, and, as Galen reporteth, able to persist erect upon an oily plank, and not to be removed by the force of three men. Brown.

PANCREAS. n. f. [παν and κρεας.] The pancreas or sweetbread, is a gland of the conglomerate sort, situate between the bottom of the stomach and the vertebrae of the loins: it lies across the abdomen, reaching from the liver to the spleen, and is strongly tied to the peritonaeum, from which it receives its common membranes. It weighs commonly four or five ounces. It is about six fingers breadth long, two broad, and one thick. Its substance is a little soft and supple. Quincy.

PANCREATICK. adj. [from pancreas.] Contained in the pancreas.

In man and viviparous quadrupeds, the food moistened with the saliva is first chewed, then swallowed into the stomach, and so evacuated into the intestines, where being mixed with the choler and pancreatick juice, it is further subtilized, and easily finds its way in at the streight orifices of the lacteous veins. Ray on the Creation.

The bile is so acrid, that nature has furnished the pancreatick juice to temper its bitterness. Arbutnot.

PANCY. n. f. [corrupted, I suppose, from PANSY.] panacey, panacea.] A flower; a kind of violet.

The daughters of the flood have search'd the mead
For violets pale, and cropp'd the poppy's head;
Pancies to please the sight, and casia sweet to smell. Dryden.

The real essence of gold is as impossible for us to know, as for a blind man to tell in what flower the colour of a panfy is, or is not to be found, whilst he has no idea of the colour of a panfy. Locke.

From the brute beasts humanity I learn'd,
And in the panfy's life God's providence discern'd. Harie.

PANDECT. n. f. [pandecta, Latin.]

1. A treatise that comprehends the whole of any science.

It were to be wished, that the commons would form a pandect of their power and privileges, to be confirmed by the entire legislative authority. Swift.

2. The digest of the civil law.

PANDE'MICK. adj. [παν and δημος.] Incident to a whole people.

Those instances bring a consumption, under the notion of a pandemick or endemick, or rather vernacular disease to England. Harvey.

PANDER. n. f. [This word is derived from Pandarus, the pimp in the story of Troilus and Cressida; it was therefore originally written pandar, till its etymology was forgotten.] A pimp; a male bawd; a procurer; an agent for the lust or ill designs of another.

Let him, with his cap in hand,
Like a base pander, hold the chamber door
Whilst by a slave

His fairest daughter is contaminated. Shakspeare.
Thou art the pander to her dishonour, and equally to me disloyal. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

If ever you prove false to one another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers between be called panders after my name. Shakspeare.

The sons of happy punks, the pander's heir,
Are privileged

To clap the first, and rule the theatre. Dryden.

Thou hast confess'd thyself the conscious pander
Of that pretended passion:

A single witness infamously known,
Against two persons of unquestion'd fame. Dryden.

My obedient honesty was made
The pander to thy lust and black ambition. Rowe.

To PA'NDER. v. a. [from the noun.] To pimp; to be subservient to lust or passion.

Proclaim no shame,
When the compulsive ardour gives the charge,
Since first itself as actively doth burn,
And reason panders will. Shakspeare.

PA'NDERLY. adj. [from pander.] Pimping; pimp-like.

Oh you panderly rascals! there's a conspiracy against me. Shakspeare.

PANDICULA'TION. n. f. [pandiculans, Lat.]

The restlessness, stretching, and uneasiness that usually accompany the cold fits of an intermitting fever.

Windy spirits, for want of a due volatilization, produce in the nerves a pandiculation, or oscillation, or stupor, or cramp in the muscles. Floyer.

PANE. n. f. [paneau, Fr.]

1. A square of glass.

The letters appear'd reverse thro' the pane,
But in Stella's bright eyes they were plac'd right again. Swift.

The face of Eleanor owes more to that single pane than to all the glasses she ever consulted. Pope.

2. A piece mixed in variegated works with other pieces.

Him all repute
For his device in handfoming a suit,
To judge of lace, pink, panes, print, and plait,
Of all the court to have the best conceit. Donne.

PANEGY'RICK. n. f. [panegyrique, Fr.

πανηγυρις.] An eulogy; an encomiastick piece.

The Athenians met at the sepulchres of those slain at Marathon, and there made panegyrics upon them. Stillingfleet.

That which is a satire to other men must be a panegyrick to your lordship. Dryden.

As he continues the exercises of these eminent virtues, he may be one of the greatest men that our age has bred; and leave materials for a panegyrick, not unworthy the pen of some future Pliny. Prior.

To chase our spleen, when themes like these increase,

Shall panegyrick reign, and censure cease? Young.

PANEGY'RIST. n. f. [from panegyrick;

panegyriste, Fr.] One that writes praise; encomiast.

Add these few lines out of a far more ancient panegyrist in the time of Constantine the Great. Camd.

PA'NEL. n. f. [panellum, Lat. paneau Fr.]

1. A square, or piece of any matter inserted between other bodies.

The chariot was all of cedar, save that the fore end had panels of sapphires, set in borders of gold. Bacon.

Maximilian his whole history is digested into twenty-four square panels of sculpture in bas relief. Addison on Italy.

This fellow will join you together as they join wainscot; then one of you will prove a shrunk panel, and, like green timber, warp. Shakspeare.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,
With driving wrong will make the panels split. Swift.

2. [panel, panellum, Latin; of the French panne, id est, pellis or peneau, a piece or pane in English.] A schedule or roll, containing the names of such jurors as the sheriff provides to pass upon a trial. And empannelling a jury is nothing but the entering them into the sheriff's roll or book. Corwell.

Then twelve of such as are indifferent, and are returned upon the principal panel, or the tales, are sworn to try the same, according to evidence. Hale.

PANG. n. f. [either from pain, or bang,

Dutch, uneasy.] Extreme pain; sudden paroxysm of torment.

Say, that some lady
Hath for your love as great a pang of heart,
As you have for Olivia. Shakspeare.

See how the pangs of death do make him grin. Shakspeare.

Suff'rance made

Almost each pang a death. Shakspeare.

Earth trembled from her entrails, as again,

In pangs, and nature gave a second groan. Milton.

Juno pitying her disastrous fate,

Sends Iris down, her pangs to mitigate. Denham.

My son advance

Still in new impudence, new ignorance.

Success let others teach, learn thou from me

Pangs without birth, and fruitless industry. Dryd.

I will give way

To all the pangs and fury of despair. Addison.

I saw the hoary traitor

Grim in the pangs of death, and bite the ground. Add.

Ah! come not, write not, think not once of me,

Nor share one pang of all I felt for thee. Pope.

To PANG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment cruelly.

If fortune divorce

It from the bearer; 'tis a suff'rance panging,

As soul's and body's parting. Shakspeare.

I grieve myself

To think, when thou shalt be desedg'd by her,

Whom now thou tir'st on, how thy memory

Will then be pang'd by me. Shakspeare.

PA'NICK. adj. [from Pan, groundless fears being supposed to be sent by Pan.] Violent without cause, applied to fear.

The sudden stir and panical fear, when chante-cleer was carried away by reynard. Camden.

Which many respect to be but a panick terror, and men do fear they justly know not what. Brown.

I left the city in a panick fright;

Lions they are in council, lambs in fight. Dryden.

PA'NICK. n. f. [πανικ.] A sudden fright without cause.

PA'NNADE. n. f. The curvet of a horse. Ainsworth.

PA'NNEL. n. f. [panneel, Dutch; paneau,

Fr.] A kind of rustick saddle.

A pannel and wanty, pack-saddle and ped,

With line to fetch litter, and halter r red. Tusser.

His strutting ribs on both sides show'd

Like furrows he himself had plow'd;

For underneath the skirt of pannel,

'Twixt every two there was a channel. Hudibras.

PA'NNEL. n. f. The stomach of a hawk. Ainsworth.

PA'NNICLE. } n. f. A plant.

PA'NNICK. }

The pannicle is a plant of the millet kind, differing from that, by the disposition of the flowers and seeds, which, of this, grow in a close thick spike: it is sowed in several parts of Europe, in the fields, as corn for the sustenance of the inhabitants; it is frequently used in particular places of Germany to make bread. Miller.

September is drawn with a cheerful countenance; in his left hand a handful of millet, oats, and pannicle. Peacham.

Pannick affords a soft demulcent nourishment. Arbutnot.

PANNI'ER. n. f. [panier, Fr.] A basket; a wicker vessel, in which fruit, or other things, are carried on a horse.

The worthless brute

Now turns a mill, or drags a loaded life,
Beneath two panniers and a baker's wife. Dryden.

We have resolved to take away their whole club in a pair of panniers, and imprison them in a cupboard. Addison.

PANO'PLY. n. f. [πανοπλία.] Complete armour.

In arms they stood
Of golden panoply, refulgent hoit!

Soon banded. Milton.

We had need to take the christian panoply, to put on the whole armour of God. Ray.

PA'NSY. n. f. A flower. See PANCY.

To PANT. v. n. [panteler, old French.]

1. To palpitate; to beat as the heart in sudden terrour, or after hard labour.

Yet might her piteous heart be seen to pant and quake. Spenser.

Below the bottom of the great abyss,
There where one centre reconciles all things,

The world's profound heart pants. Crashaw.

If I am to lose by sight the soft pantings, which I have always felt when I heard your voice, pull out these eyes before they lead me to be ungrateful. Taylor.

2. To have the breast heaving, as for want of breath.

Pluto pants for breath from out his cell,
And opens wide the grinning jaws of hell. Dryden.

PAPILIONACEOUS. adj. [from papilio,

Latin.]

The flowers of some plants are called papilionae- ceous by botanists, which represent something of the

here the petals, or flower leaves, are always of a disform figure: they are four in number, but joined together at the extremities; one of these is usually larger than the rest, and is erected in the middle of the flower, and by some called vexillum: the plants that have this flower are of the leguminous kind; as pease, vetches, &c. Quincy.

All leguminous plants are, as the learned say, papilionaceous, or bear butterflied flowers. Harte.

Demulcent, and of easy digestion, moistening and resolvent of the bile, are vegetable sops; as honey, and the juices of ripe fruits, some of the cooling, lactescent, papescient plants; as cichory and lettuce.

Arbutnot on Ailments.

PAPILLO. n. f. [Lat. papillan, Fr.] A butterfly; a moth of various colours.

Conjecture cannot estimate all the kinds of papillos, natives of this island, to fall short of three hundred. Ray.

PAPILIONACEOUS. adj. [from papilio, Latin.]

The flowers of some plants are called papilionaceous by botanists, which represent something of the figure of a butterfly, with its wings displayed; and here the petala, or flower leaves, are always of a difform figure: they are four in number, but joined together at the extremities; one of these is usually larger than the rest, and is erected in the middle of the flower, and by some called vexillum: the plants that have this flower are of the leguminous kind; as pease, vetches, &c. Quincy.

All leguminous plants are, as the learned say, papilionaceous, or bear butterflied flowers. Harte.

PAPILLARY. } adj. [from papilla.] Hav-

PAPILLOUS. } ing emulgent vessels, or resemblances of paps.

Malpighi concludes, because the outward cover of the tongue is perforated, under which lie papillary parts, that in these the taste lieth. Derham.

Nutritious materials that slip through the defective papillary strainers. Blackmore.

The papillous inward coat of the intestines is extremely sensible. Arbutnot.

PAPIST. n. f. [papiste, Fr. papista, Lat.]

One that adheres to the communion of the pope and church of Rome.

The principal clergyman had frequent conferences with the prince, to persuade him to change his religion, and become a papist. Clarendon.

PAPISTICAL. adj. [from papist.] Popish;

adherent to popery.

There are some papistical practitioners among

you. Whig.

PAPISTRY. n. f. [from papist.] Popery;

the doctrine of the Romish church.

Papistry, as a standing pool, covered and overflowed

all England. Ascham.

A great number of parishes in England consist of rude and ignorant men, drowned in papistry. Whitg.

PAPPOUS. adj. [papposus, low Lat.] Having that soft light down, growing out of the seeds of some plants; such as thistles, dandelyon, hawk-weeds, which buoys them up so in the air, that they can be blown any where about with the wind: and, therefore, this distinguishes one kind of plants, which is called pappousa, or pappos flores. Quincy.

Another thing argumentative of providence is, that pappous plumage growing upon the tops of some seed; whereby they are waisted with the wind, and by that means disseminated far and wide. Ray.

Dandelion, and most of the pappous kind, have long numerous feathers, by which they are waisted every way. Derham.

PAPPY. adj. [from pap.] Soft; succulent;

easily divided

These were converted into fens, where the ground, being spongy, sucked up the water, and the loosened earth swelled into a soft and pappy substance. Burnet.

Its tender and pappy flesh cannot, at once, be fitted to be nourished by solid diet. Ray.

PAR. n. f. [Lat.] State of equality; equivalence; equal value. This word is not elegantly used, except as a term of traf-fick.

To estimate the par, it is necessary to know how much silver is in the coins of two countries, by which you charge the bill of exchange. Locke.

Exchequer bills are below par. Swift.

My friend is the second after the treasurer; the rest of the great officers are much upon a par. Swift.

PARABLE. adj. [parabilis, Latin.] Easily procured. Not in use.

They were not well withers upto parable physic, or remedies easily acquired, who derived medicines from the phoenix. Brown.

PARABLE. n. f. [παράβολα; parabole, Fr.]

A similitude; a relation under which something else is figured.

Balaam took up his parable, and said. Numbers.

In the parable of the talents, our Saviour plainly teacheth us, that men are rewarded according to the improvements they make. Nelson.

What is thy fulsome parable to me?

My body is from all diseases free. Dryden.

PARABOLA. n. f. [Latin.] A conick section, arising from a cone's being cut by a plane parallel to one of its sides, or parallel to a plane that touches one side of the cone. Harris.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles as they do, but have moved in hyperbolas or parabolas, or in ellipses, very excentrick. Bentley.

PARABOLICAL. } adj. [parabolique, Fr.]

PARABOLICK. } from parable.]

1. Expressed by parable or similitude.

Such from the text decry the parabolical exposition of Cajetan. Brown.

The scheme of these words is figurative, as being a parabolical description of God's vouchsafing to the world the invaluable blessing of the gospel, by the similitude of a king. South.

2. Having the nature or form of a parabola.

[from parabola.]

The pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white, but riseth up a hil-

lock above its convexity, and is of an hyperbolical

The incident ray will describe, in the refracting medium, the parabolick curve. Cheyne.

PARABOLICALLY. adv. [from parabolical.]

1. By way of parable or similitude.

These words, notwithstanding parabolically intended, admit no literal inference. Brown.

2. In the form of a parabola.

PARABOLISM. n. f. In algebra, the division of the terms of an equation, by a known quantity that is involved or multiplied in the first term. Diſt.

PARABOLOID. n. f. [παράβολον and ἰδω.]

A paraboliform curve in geometry, whose ordinates are supposed to be in subtriplicate, subquadruplicate, &c. ratio of their respective abscissæ: there is another species;

for if you suppose the parameter, multiplied into the square of the abscissa, to be equal to the cube of the ordinate; then the curve is called a semicubical paraboloid.

Harris.

PARACENTE'SIS. n. f. [παράκέντησις, παράκντις, to pierce; paracense, Fr.] That operation, whereby any of the venters are perforated to let out any matter; as tapping in a tympany.
Quincy.

PARACENTRICAL. adj. [παρά and κέντρον.]

PARACENTRICK. adj. Deviating from circularity.

Since the planets move in the elliptick orbits, in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun, describe equal areas in equal times, we must find out a law for the paracentric motion, that may make the orbits elliptic.
Cibryne.

PARADE. n. f. [parade, French.]

1. Show; ostentation.

He is not led forth as to a review, but as to a battle; nor adorned for parade, but execution.
Gran.

Be rich; but of your wealth make no parade,
At least, before your master's debts are paid.
Swift.

2. Procession; assembly of pomp.

The rites perform'd, the parson paid,
In state return'd the grand parade.
Swift.

3. Military order.

The cherubim stood arm'd
To their night-watches in warlike parade.
Milton.

4. Place where troops draw up to do duty and mount guard.

5. Guard; posture of defence.

Accustom him to make judgment of men by their inside, which often shews itself in little things, when they are not in parade, and upon their guard.
Locke.

PARADIGM. n. f. [παράδειγμα.] Example.

PARADISE. n. f. [παράδεισος; paradise, French.]

1. The blissful regions, in which the first pair was placed.

Longer in that paradise to dwell,
The law I gave to nature him forbids.
Milton.

2. Any place of felicity.

Consideration, like an angel, came,
And whipt th' offending Adam out of him;
Leaving his body as a paradise,
T' envelope and contain celestial spirits.
Shakspeare.

If he should lead her into a fool's paradise,
It were very gross behaviour.
Shakspeare.

Why, nature, bower the spirit of a fiend
In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh?
Shakspeare.

The earth

Shall all be paradise, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier days.
Milton.

PARADISICAL. adj. [from paradise.]

Suiting paradise; making paradise.

The antients express the situation of paradisical earth in reference to the sea.
Burnet.

Such a mediocrity of heat would be so far from exalting the earth to a more happy and paradisical state, that it would turn it to a barren wilderness.
Woodward.

The summer is a kind of heaven, when we wander in a paradisical scene, among groves and gardens; but, at this season, we are like our poor first parents, turned out of that agreeable, though solitary life, and forced to look about for more people to help to bear our labours, to get into warmer houses, and hive together in cities.
Pope.

PARADOX. n. f. [paradoxe, Fr. παράδοξος.] A tenet contrary to received opinion; an assertion contrary to appearance; a position in appearance absurd.

A gloss there is to colour that paradox, and make it appear in shew not to be altogether unreasonable.
Hooker.

You undergo too strict a paradox,
Striving to make an ugly deed look fair.
Shakspeare.

'Tis an unnatural paradox in the doctrine of causes, that evil should proceed from goodness.
Holyday.

In their love of God men can never be too affectionate: it is as true, though it may seem a paradox, that in their hatred of sin, men may be sometimes too passionate.
Spratt.

'Tis not impossible for any man in his wits, though never so much addicted to paradoxes, to believe otherwise, but that the whole is greater than the part; that contradictions cannot be both true; that three and three make six; that four is more than three.
Wilkins.

PARADOXICAL. adj. [from paradox.]

1. Having the nature of a paradox.

What hath been every where opinioned by all men, is more than paradoxical to dispute.
Brown.

Strange it is, how the curiosity of men, that have been active in the instruction of beasts, among those many paradoxical and unheard-of imitations, should not attempt to make one speak.
Brown.

These will seem strange and paradoxical to one that takes a prospect of the world.
Norris.

2. Inclined to new tenets, or notions contrary to received opinions.

PARADOXICALLY. adv. [from paradox.]

In a paradoxical manner; in a manner contrary to received opinions.

If their vanity of appearing singular puts them upon advancing paradoxes, and proving them as paradoxically, they are usually laugh'd at.
Collier.

PARADOXICALNESS. n. f. [from paradox.]

State of being paradoxical.

PARADOXOLOGY. n. f. [from paradox.]

The use of paradoxes.

Perpend the difficulty, which obscurity, or unavoidable paradoxology, must put upon the attempter.
Brown.

PARAGOGE. n. f. [παράγωγη; paragoge, Fr.]

A figure whereby a letter or syllable is added at the end of a word, without adding any thing to the sense of it: as, vast, vastly.
Diſt.

PARAGON. n. f. [paragon, from parage, equality, old Fr. paragone, Italian.]

1. A model; a pattern; something supremely excellent.

An angel! or, if not,
An earthly paragon.
Shakspeare.

Tunis was never graced before with such a paragon to their queen.
Shakspeare.

2. Companion; fellow.

Alone he rode without his paragon.
Spenser.

TO PARAGON. v. a. [paragonner, Fr.]

1. To compare; to parallel; to mention in competition.

The picture of Pamela, in little form, he wore in a tablet, purposing to paragon the little one with Arctia's length, not doubting but even, in that little quantity, the excellency of that would shine through the weakness of the other.
Sidney.

I will give thee bloody teeth,
If thou with Cæsar paragon again
My man of men.
Shakspeare.

Proud feat
Of Lucifer, so by allusion call'd
Of that bright star to Satan paragon'd.
Milton.

2. To equal; to be equal to.

He hath achiev'd a maid
That paragons description and wild fame;
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens.
Shakspeare.

We will wear our mortal state with her,
Catherine our queen, before the prime creature
That's paragon'd i' th' world.
Shakspeare.

PARAGRAPH. n. f. [paragraphe, Fr. παράγραφον.] A distinct part of a discourse.

Of his last paragraph, I have transcribed the most important parts.
Swift.

PARAGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from paragraph.]

By paragraphs; with distinct breaks or divisions.

PARALLACTICAL. adj. [from parallax.]

PARALLACTICK. adj. Pertaining to a parallax.

PARALLAX. n. f. [παράλαξις.] The distance between the true and apparent place of the sun, or any star viewed from the surface of the earth.

By what strange parallax or optick skill
Of vision multiply'd.
Milton.

Light moves from the sun to us in about seven or eight minutes time, which distance is about 70,000,000 English miles, supposing the horizontal parallax of the sun to be about twelve seconds.
Newton.

PARALLEL. adj. [παράλληλος; parallele, Fr.]

1. Extended in the same direction, and preserving always the same distance.

Distorting the order and theory of causes perpendicular to their effects, he draws them aside unto things whereto they run parallel, and their proper motions would never meet together.
Brown.

2. Having the same tendency.

When honour runs parallel with the laws of God and our country, it cannot be too much cherished; but when the dictates of honour are contrary to those of religion and equity, they are the great depravations of human nature.
Addison.

3. Continuing the resemblance through many particulars; equal; like.

The foundation principle of peripateticism is exactly parallel to an acknowledged nothing.
Glauco.

I shall observe something parallel to the wooing and wedding suit in the behaviour of persons of figure.
Addison.

In the parallel place before quoted.
Lefley.

Compare the words and phrases in one place of an author, with the same in other places of the same author, which are generally called parallel places.
Watts.

PARALLEL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Line continuing its course, and still remaining at the same distance from another line.

Who made the spider parallels design,
Sure as De Moivre, without rule or line?
Pope.

2. Line on the globe marking the latitude.

3. Direction conformable to that of another line.

Dissensions, like small streams, are first begun,
Scarce seen they rise, but gather as they run;
So lines, that from their parallel decline,
More they proceed, the more they still disjoin.
Garth.

4. Resemblance; conformity continued through many particulars; likeness.

Such a resemblance of all parts,
Life, death, age, fortune, nature, arts;
She lights her torch at theirs to tell,
And shew the world this parallel.
Denham.

'Twixt earthly females and the moon,
All parallels exactly run.
Swift.

5. Comparison made.

The parallel holds in the gameness, as well as laboriousness of the work.
Decay of Piety.

A reader cannot be more rationally entertained, than by comparing and drawing a parallel between his own private character, and that of other persons.
Addison.

6. Any thing resembling another.

Thou ungrateful brute, if thou wouldst find thy parallel, go to hell, which is both the region and the emblem of ingratitude.
South.

For works like these, let deathless journals tell,
None but thyself can be thy parallel.
Pope.

TO PARALLEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place, so as always to keep the same direction with another line.

The Azores having a middle situation between these continents and that vast tract of America, the needle seemeth equally distracted by both, and diverting unto neither, doth parallel and place itself upon the true meridian.

2. To keep in the same direction; to level.

The loyal sufferers abroad became subjected to the worst effect of banishment, and even there expelled and driven from their flights: so paralleling in their exigencies the most immediate objects of that monster's fury.
Fell.

His life is parallel'd
Ev'n with the stroke and line of his great justice.
Shakspeare.

3. To correspond to.

P A R

That he stretched out the north over the empty places, seems to parallel the expression of David, he stretched out the earth upon the waters. Burnet.
4. To be equal to; to resemble through many particulars.
In the fire, the destruction was so swift, sudden,
vast, and miserable, as nothing can parallel in story.
Dryden.

5. To compare.

I parallel'd more than once, our idea of substance, with the Indian philosopher's he-knew-not-what,
which supported the tortoise. Locke.

PARALLELISM. n. f. [parallelisme, Fr.] State of being parallel.

The parallelism and due proportionated inclination of the axis of the earth. More.

Speaking of the parallelism of the axis of the earth, I demand, whether it be better to have the axis of the earth steady and perpetually parallel to itself, or to have it carelessly tumble this way and that way. Ray.

PARALLELOGRAM. n. f. [παράλληλον and γραμμή; parallelograme, Fr.] In geometry, a right lined quadrilateral
and equal. Harris.

The experiment we made in a loadstone of a parallelogram, or long figure, wherein only inverting the extremes, as it came out of the fire, we altered the poles. Brown.

We may have a clear idea of the area of a para- llelogram, without knowing what relation it bears to the area of a triangle. Watts.

PARALLELOGRAMICAL. adj. [from para- llelogram.] Having the properties of a parallelogram.

PARALLELOPIPED. n. f. [parallelopiede, Fr.] A solid figure contained under six parallelograms, the opposites of which are equal and parallel; or it is a prism, whose base is a parallelogram: it is always triple to a pyramid of the same base and height. Harris.

Two prisms alike in shape I tied so, that their axes and opposite sides being parallel, they composed a parallelopiped. Newton.

Crystals that hold lead are yellowish, and of a cubic or parallelopiped figure. Woodward.

PARALOGISM. n. f. [παράλογισμος; para- logisme, Fr.] A false argument.

That because they have not a bladder of gall, like those we observe in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogism, not admissible, a fallacy that dwells not in a cloud, and needs not the sun to scatter it. Brown.

Modern writers, making the drachma less than the denarius, others equal, have been deceived by a double paralogism, in standing too nicely upon the bare words of the ancients, without examining the things. Arbutnot.

If a syllogism agree with the rules given for the construction of it, it is called a true argument: if it disagree with these rules, it is a paralogism, or false argument. Watts.

PARALOGY. n. f. False reasoning.

That Methuselah was the longest liver of all the posterity of Adam, we quietly believe; but that he must needs be so, is perhaps below paralogy to deny.
Brown.

PARALYSIS. [παράλυσις; paralyse, Fr.]
A palsy.

PARALYTICAL. } adj. [from paralysis;
PARALYTICK. } paralytique, French.]

Palsied; inclined to palsy.

Nought shall it profit, that the charming fair, Angelick, softest work of heav'n, draws near
To the cold shaking paralytick hand, Senseless of beauty. Prior.

If a nerve be cut, or streightly bound, that goes to any muscle, that muscle shall immediately lose its motion: which is the case of paralyticks. Derham.

The difficulties of breathing and swallowing, without any tumour after long diseases, proceed commonly from a resolution or paralytical disposition of the parts. Arbutnot.

P A R

PARAMETER. n. f. The latus rectum of a parabola, is a third proportional to the abscissa and any ordinate; so that the square of the ordinate is always equal to the rectangle under the parameter and ab-scissa: but, in the ellipsis and hyperbola, it has a different proportion. Harris.

PARAMOUNT. adj. [per and mount.]

1. Superiour; having the highest jurisdiction: as, lord paramount, the chief of the feignory: with to.

Leagues within the state are ever pernicious to monarchies; for they raise an obligation, paramount to obligation of sovereignty, and make the king, t^{an}quam unus ex nobis. Bacon.

The dogmatist's opinioned assurance is paramount to argument. Glanville.

If all power be derived from Adam, by divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government; and therefore the positive laws of men cannot determine that which is itself the foundation of all law. Locke.

Mankind, seeing the apostles possessed of a power plainly paramount to the powers of all the known beings, whether angels or dæmons, could not question their being inspired by God. West.

2. Eminent; of the highest order.

John a Chamber was hanged upon a gibbet raised a stage higher in the midst of a square gallows, as a traitor paramout; and a number of his chief accomplices were hanged upon the lower story round him.
Bacon.

PARAMOUNT. n. f. The chief.

In order came the grand infernal peers,
'Midst came their mighty paramount. Milton.

PARAMOUR. n. f. [par and amour, Fr.]

1. A lover or wooer.

Upon the floor
A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat,
Counted of many a jolly paramour,
The which them did in modestwise amate,
And each one sought his lady to aggrate. Spenser.

No season then for her
To wanton with the sun her lusty paramour. Milton.

2. A mistress. It is obsolete in both senses, though not inelegant or unmusical.

Shall I believe
That unsubstantial death is amorous,
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps Thee here in dark to be his paramour? Shaksp.

PARANYMPH. n. f. [πάρεα and νυμφή;
paranymphe, Fr.]

1. A brideman; one who leads the bride to her marriage.

The Timnian bride
Had not so soon prefer'd
Thy paranymphe, worthless to thee compar'd, Successor in thy bed. Milton.

2. One who countenances or supports another.

Sin hath got a paranymphe and a solicitor, a warrant and an advocate. Taylor.

PARAPEGM. n. f. [παράπηγμα, παρά- πήγνυμι.] A brazen table fixed to a pillar, on which laws and proclamations were anciently engraved: also a table set up publicly, containing an account of the rising and setting of the stars, eclipses of the sun and moon, the seasons of the year, &c. whence astrologers give this name to the tables, on which they draw figures according to their art. Phillips.

Our forefathers, observing the course of the sun, and marking certain mutations to happen in his progress through the zodiac, set them down in their pa- rapegms, or astronomical canons. Brown.

PARAPET. n. f. [parapet, Fr. parapetto,
Italian.] A wall breast high.

There was a wall or parapet of teeth set in our mouth to restrain the petulancy of our words.
Ben Jonson.

PARAPHERNALIA. n. f. [Lat. para-

P A R

phernaux, Fr.] Goods in the wife's disposal.

PARAPHIMOSIS. n. f. [παράφίμωσις; para- phimose, Fr.] A disease when the pre-putium cannot be drawn over the glans.

PARAPHRASE. n. f. [παράφρασις; pa- raphrase, Fr.] A loose interpretation;
an explanation in many words.

All the laws of nations were but a paraphrase upon this standing rectitude of nature, that was ready to enlarge itself into suitable determinations, upon all emergent objects and occasions. South.

In paraphrase, or translation with latitude, the author's words are not so strictly followed as his sense, and that too amplified, but not altered: such is Mr. Waller's translation of Virgil's fourth Æneid.
Dryden.

TO PARAPHRASE. v. n. [paraphraser, Fr.
παράφραζω.] To interpret with laxity of expression; to translate loosely.

We are put to construe and paraphrase our own words, to free ourselves from the ignorance and malice of our adversaries. Stillingfleet.

What needs he paraphrase on what we mean?

We were at worst but wanton; he's obscene. Dryden.

Where translation is impracticable, they may paraphrase.—But it is intolerable, that, under a pretence of paraphrasing and translating, a way should be suffered of treating authors to a manifest disadvantage. Felton.

PARAPHRAST. n. f. [paraphraste, French; παράφραστής.] A lax interpreter; one who explains in many words.

The fittest for publick audience are such, as following a middle course between the rigour of literal translators and the liberty of paraphrasts, do, with great shortness and plainness, deliver the meaning.
Hooker.

The Chaldean paraphrast renders Gerah by Meath. Arbutnot.

PARAPHRASTICAL. } adj. [from para- PARAPHRASTICK. } phraste.] Lax in interpretation; not literal; not verbal.

PARAPHRENETIS. n. f. [παρεφρενής and φρενής;
paraphrenesie, Fr.]

Paraphrenetis is an inflammation of the diaphragm.
The symptoms are a violent fever; a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbutnot.

PARAQUETO. n. f. A little parrot.

PARASANG. n. f. [parasang, low Latin.]
A Persian measure of length.

Since the mind is not able to frame an idea of any space without parts, instead thereof it makes use of the common measures, which, by familiar use, in each country, have imprinted themselves on the memory; as inches and feet, or cubits and parasangs.
Locke.

PARASITE. n. f. [parasite, Fr. parasita, Lat.] One that frequents rich tables,
and earns his welcome by flattery.

He is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hopes linger. Shakspere.

Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites,
Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears,
You fools of fortune. Shakspere.

Diogenes, when mice came about him, as he was eating, said, I see that even Diogenes nourisheth parasites. Bacon.

Thou, with trembling fear,
Or like a fawning parasite, obey'd;
Then to thyself alcrib'd the truth foretold. Milton.
The people sweat not for their king's delight,
T' enrich a pimp, or raise a parasite. Dryden.

PARASITICAL. } adj. [parasitique, French; PARASITICK. } from parasite.] Flattering; wheedling.

The bishop received small thanks for his parasitic presentation. Hakerwill.

Some parasitick preachers have dared to call those martyrs, who died fighting against me. K. Charles.

PA'RASOL. n. f. A small canopy or umbrella carried over the head, to shelter from the heat of the sun. Dict.

PARASYNE'XIS. n. f. In the civil law, a conventicle or unlawful meeting. Dict.

TO PARBOIL. v. a. [parbouiller, Fr.] To half boil; to boil in part.

Parboil two large capons upon a soft fire, by the space of an hour, till, in effect, all the blood be gone. Bacon.

From the sea into the ship we turn,
Like parboil'd wretches, on the coals to burn. Donne.

Like the steam starved men did draw
From parboil'd shoes and boots. Donne.

TO PARBREAK. v. n. [brecker, Dutch.] To vomit. Obsolete.

PARBREAK. n. f. [from the verb.] Vomit. Obsolete.

Her filthy parbreak all the place defiled has. Spenser.

PARCEL. n. f. [parcelle, Fr. particula, Latin.]

1. A small bundle.

2. A part of the whole; part taken separately.

Women, Silvius, had they mark'd him
In parcels, as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him. Shakspeare.

I drew from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage delate;
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctively. Shakspeare.

An inventory thus importing,
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs and ornaments of household. Shakspeare.

With what face could such a great man have begged
Such a parcel of the crown lands, one a vast sum Of money, another the forfeited estate? Davenant.

I have known pensions given to particular persons, any one of which, if divided into smaller parcels, and distributed to those who distinguish themselves by wit or learning, would answer the end. Swift.

The same experiments succeed on two parcels of the white of an egg, only it grows somewhat thicker upon mixing with an acid. Arbutnot.

3. A quantity or mass.

What can be rationally conceived in so transparent a substance as water for the production of these colours, besides the various sizes of its fluid and globular parcels? Newt.n.

4. A number of persons: in contempt.

This youthful parcel
Of noble batchelors stand at my bestowing. Shakspeare.

5. Any number or quantity: in contempt.

They came to this conclusion; that unless they could, by a parcel of fair words and pretences, engage them into a confederacy, there was no good to be done. L'Estrange.

TO PARCEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide into portions.

If they allot and parcel out several perfections to several deities, do they not, by this, assert contradictions; making deity only to such a measure perfect? whereas a deity implies perfection beyond all measure. South.

Those ghostly kings would parcel out my pow'r,
And all the fatness of my land devour. Dryden.

2. To make up into a mass.

What a wounding shame, that mine own servant should parcel the sum of my disgraces by addition of his envy! Shakspeare.

PARCENER. n. f. [In common law.] When one dies possessed of an estate, and having issue only daughters, or his sisters be his heirs; so that the lands descend to those daughters or sisters: these are called parceners, and are but as one heir. Dict.

PARCENARY. n. f. [from parsonier, Fr.]
A holding or occupying of land by morpersons pro indiviso, or by joint tenants, otherwise called coparceners: for if they refuse to divide their common inheritance, and chuse rather to hold it jointly,

they are said to hold in parcenary.

Corwell.

TO PARCH. v. a. [from παραίδω, says Junius; from percoquo, says Skinner; neither of them seem satisfied with their conjecture: perhaps from perustas, burnt, to perust, to parch; perhaps from parchment, the effect of fire upon parchment being almost proverbial.] To burn slightly and superficially; to seorch; to dry.

Hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall? Shakspeare.

Did he so often lodge in open field
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France? Shakspeare.

Torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milton.

I'm stupify'd with sorrow, past relief
Of tears; parch'd up and wither'd with my grief. Dryden.

Without this circular motion of our earth, one hemisphere would be condemned to perpetual cold and darkness, the other continually roasted and parched by the sun beams. Ray.

The Syrian star
With his sultry breath infects the sky;
The ground below is parch'd, the heav'ns above us
fry. Dryden.

Full fifty years
I have indur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the severer heats of parching summer. Rowe.
The skin grows parched and dry, and the whole body lean and meagre. Blackmore.

A man distressed with thirst in the parched places of the wilderness, searches every pit, but finds no water. Rogers.

TO PARCH. v. n. To be scorched.

We were better parch in Africk sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes. Shakspeare.

If to prevent the acrospiring, it be thrown thin,
many corns will dry and parch into barley. Mortimer.

PARCHMENT. n. f. [parchemin, Fr. pergamena, Lat.] Skins dressed for the writer.
Among traders, the skins of sheep are called parchment, those of calves vellum.

Is not this a lamentable thing, that the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment; that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Shakspeare.

In the coffin, that had the books, they were found as fresh as if newly written, being written in parchment, and covered with wax candles of wax. Bacon.

Like flying shades before the clouds we shew,
We shrink like parchment in consuming flame. Dryden.

PARCHMENT-MAKER. n. f. [parchment and maker.] He who dresses parchment.

PARD. } n. f. [pardus, pardalis, Lat.]

PARDALE. } The leopard; in poetry, any of the spotted beasts.

The pardale swift, and the tyger cruel. Spenser.
As fox to lambs, as wolf to heifer's calf;
As pard to the hind, or step-dame to her son. Shakspeare.

Ten brace of grey-hounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair,

A match for *pard*s in flight, in grappling for the bear. Dryden.

TO PARDON. v. a. [pardonner, Fr.]

1. To excuse an offender.

When I beheld you in Cilicia,
An enemy to Rome, I pardon'd you. Dryden.

2. To forgive a crime.

I will pardon all their iniquities. Jeremiab.
Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong,
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.

3. To remit a penalty.

That thou may'st see the diff'rence of our spirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou ask it. Shakspeare.

4. Pardon me, is a word of civil denial, or slight apology.

Sir, pardon me, it is a letter from my brother. Shakspeare.

PARDON. n. f. [pardon, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Forgiveness of an offender.

2. Forgiveness of a crime.

He that pleaseth great men, shall get pardon for iniquity. Ecclesiasticus.

A slight pamphlet, about the elements of architecture, hath been entertained with some pardon
among my friends. Wolton.

But infinite in pardon is my judge. Milton.
What better can we do than prostrate fall
Before him reverent, and there confess

Humbly our faults, and pardon beg, with tears
Wat'ring the ground? Milton.

There might you see
Indulgencies, dispensers, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton.

3. Remission of penalty.

4. Forgiveness received.

A man may be safe as to his condition, but, in the mean time, dark and doubtful as to his apprehensions: secure in his pardon, but miserable in the ignorance of it; and so passing all his days in the disconsolate, uneasy vicissitudes of hopes and fears, at length go out of the world, not knowing whither he goes. South.

5. Warrant of forgiveness, or exemption from punishment.

The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon. Shakspeare.

PARDONABLE. adj. [pardonable, Fr. from pardon.] Venial; excusable.

That which we do being evil, is notwithstanding by so much more pardonable, by how much the exigencies of so doing, or the difficulty of doing otherwise, is greater, unless this necessity or difficulty have originally risen from ourselves. Hooker.

A blind man sitting in the chimney corner is pardonable enough, but sitting at the helm, he is intolerable. South.

What English readers, unacquainted with Greek or Latin, will believe me, when we confess we derive all that is pardonable in us from ancient fountains? Dryden.

PARDONABLENESS. n. f. [from pardonable.] Venialness; susceptibility of pardon.

St. John's word is, all sin is transgression of the law; St. Paul's, the wages of sin is death: put these two together, and this conceit of the natural pardonableness of sin vanishes away. Hall.

PARDONABLY. adv. [from pardonable.]

Venially; excusably.

I may judge when I write more or less pardonably.
Dryden.

PARDONER. n. f. [from pardon.]

1. One who forgives another.

This is his pardon, purchas'd by such sin,
For which the pardon himself is in. Shakspeare.

2. One of the fellows that carried about the pope's indulgencies, and sold them to such as would buy them, against whom Luther incensed the people of Germany. Corwell.

TO PARE. v. a. [This word is reasonably deduced by Skinner from the French phrase, parer les ongles, to dress the horses hoofs when they are shaved by the farrier: thus we first said, pare your nails; and from this transferred the word to general use.] To cut off extremities of the surface; to cut away by little and little; to diminish. If pare be used before the thing diminished, it is followed immediately by its accusative;
if it precedes the thing taken away, or agrees in the passive voice with the thing taken away, as a nominative, it then requires a particle: as, away, off.

The creed of Athanasius, and that sacred hymn of glory, than which nothing doth sound more heavenly in the ears of faithful men, are now reckoned as superfluities, which we must in any case pare away, lest we cloy God with too much service. Hooker.

I have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home;
But par'd my present havings to bestow
My bounties upon you. Shakspeare.

I am a man, whom fortune hath cruelly scratch'd,
—'Tis too late to pare her nails now. Shakspeare.

The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure
To have his princely paws all par'd away. Shakspeare.

The king began to pare a little the privilege of clergy, ordaining that clerks convict should be burned in the hand. Bacon.

Pick out of tales the mirth, but not the sin,
He pares his apple, that will cleanly feed. Herbert.

Whoever will partake of God's secrets, must first look into his own, he must pare off whatsoever is amiss, and not without holiness approach to the holiest of all holies. Taylor.

All the mountains were pared off the earth, and the surface of it lay even, or in an equal convexity every where with the surface of the sea. Burnet.

The most poetical parts, which are description and images, were to be pared away, when the body was swollen into too large a bulk for the representation of the stage. Dryden.

The sword, as it was justly drawn by us, so can it scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be so far pared and reduced, as that we may be under no apprehensions. Atterbury.

'Twere well if she would pare her nails. Pope.

PARAGO'RIK. adj. [παρηγορητικός.] Having the power in medicine to comfort, mollify, and assuage. Diels.

PAR'ENCHYMA. n. s. [παρεγχυμα.] A spongy or porous substance: in physics, a part through which the blood is strained for its better fermentation and perfection. Diels.

PARENCHY'MATOUS. } adj. [from paren-
PARENCHY'MOUS. } chyma.] Relating to the parenchyma; spongy.

Ten thousand seeds of the plant hart's-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn. Now the covers and true body of each seed, the parenchymatous and ligneous parts of both moderately multiplied, afford an hundred thousand millions of formed atoms in the space of a pepper-corn. Grew.

Those parts, formerly reckoned parenchymatous, are now found to be bundles of exceedingly small threads. Cheyne.

PAR'NESIS. n. s. [παραινέσις.] Persuasion; exhortation. Diels.

PARENE'TICK. [παραινέτικός.] Hortatory.

PARENT. n. s. [parent, Fr. parents, Lat.] A father or mother.

All true virtues are to honour true religion as their parent, and all well ordered commonweales to love her as their chiefest stay. Hooker.

His custom was, during the warmer season of the year, to spend an hour before evening-prayer in catechising; whereat the parents and older sort were wont to be present. Fell.

As a publick parent of the state,
My justice, and thy crime, requires thy fate. Dryden.

In vain on the dissembled mother's tongue
Had cunning art and sly persuasion hung;
And real care in vain and native love
In the true parent's panting breast had strove. Prior.

PAR'ENTAGE. n. s. [parentage, Fr. from parent.] Extraction; birth; condition with respect to the rank of parents.

A gentleman of noble parentage,

Of fair demerits, youthful and nobly allied Shakspeare.

Though men esteem thee low of parentage,
Thy father is th' eternal king. Milton.

To his levee go,
And from himself your parentage may know. Dryden.

We find him not only boasting of his parentage, as an Israelite at large, but particularizing his descent from Benjamin. Atterbury.

PARENTAL. adj. [from parent.] Becoming parents; pertaining to parents.

It overthrows the careful course and parental provision of nature, whereby the young ones, newly excluded, are sustained by the dam. Brown.

These eggs hatched by the warmth of the sun into little worms, feed without any need of parental care. Derham.

Young ladies, on whom parental controul sits heavily, gives a man of intrigue room to think that they want to be parents. Clarissa.

PARENTA'TION. n. s. [from parento, Lat.]

Something done or said in honour of the dead.

PAREN'THESIS. n. s. [parentese, Fr. παρεν, ἐν, and περιήρησι.] A sentence so included in another sentence, as that it may be taken out, without injuring the sense of that which encloses it: being commonly marked thus, ().

In vain is my person excepted by a parenthesis of words, when so many are armed against me with swords. King Charles.

In his Indian relations, are contained strange and incredible accounts; he is seldom mentioned, without a derogatory parenthesis, in any author. Brown.

Thou shalt be seen,
Tho' with some short parenthesis between,
High on the throne of wit. Dryden.

Don't suffer every occasional thought to carry you away into a long parenthesis, and thus stretch out your discourse, and divert you from the point in hand. Watts.

PARENTHETICAL. adj. [from parenthesis.] Pertaining to a parenthesis.

PAR'ER. n. s. [from pare.] An instrument to cut away the surface.

A hone and a parer, like sole of a boot,
To pare away grassie, and to raise up the root. Tusser.

PAR'ERGY. n. s. [παρεργία and εργον.] Something unimportant; something done by the by.

Scripture being serious, and commonly omitting such parergies, it will be unreasonable to condemn all laughter. Brown.

PAR'GET. n. s. Plaster laid upon roofs of rooms.

Gold was the parget, and the cieling bright
Did shine all scaly with great plates of gold;
The floor with jasp and emerald was dight. Spenser.

Of English talc, the coarser sort is called plaster or parget: the finer, spade. Woodward.

TO PAR'GET. v. a. [from the noun.] To plaster; to cover with plaster.

There are not more arts of disguising our corporeal blemishes than our moral; and yet, while we thus paint and parget our own deformities, we cannot allow any the least imperfection of another's to remain undetected. Government of the Tongue.

PAR'GETER. n. s. [from parget.] A plasterer.

PARHE'LION. n. s. [παρελίων and ἥλιος.] A mock sun.

To neglect that supreme resplendency, that shines in God, for those dim representations of it, that we so doat on in the creature, is as absurd, as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion, instead of adoring the sun. Boyle.

PARI'ETAL. adj. [from paries, Lat.] Constituting the sides or walls.

The lower part of the parietal and upper part of the temporal bones were fractured. Sharp.

PARI'ETARY. n. s. [parietaire, Fr.] An herb. Ainsworth.

PAR'ING. n. s. [from pare.] That which is pared off any thing; the rind.

Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheese; and consumes itself to the very paring. Shakspeare.

To his guest tho' no way sparing,
He eat himself the rind and paring. Pope.

In May, after rain, pare off the surface of the earth, and with the parings raise your hills high, and enlarge their breadth. Mortimer.

PA'RI. n. s. [aconitum.] An herb. Ainsworth.

PA'RISH. n. s. [parochia, low Lat. paroisse, Fr. of the Greek παροικία, i. e. accolarum conventus, accolatus, sacra vicinia.]

The particular charge of a secular priest.

Every church is either cathedral, conventual, or parochial: cathedral is that where there is a bishop seated, so called a cathedra: conventual consists of regular clerks, professing some order of religion, or of a dean and chapter, or other college of spiritual men: parochial is that which is instituted for saying divine service, and administering the holy sacraments to the people, dwelling within a certain compass of ground near unto it. Our realm was first divided into parishes by Honorius, archbishop of Canterbury, in the year of our Lord 636. Cowell.

Dametas came piping and dancing, the merriest man in a parish. Sidney.

By the catholic church is meant no more than the common church, into which all such persons as belonged to that parish, in which it was built, were wont to congregate. Pearson.

The tythes, his parish freely paid, he took;
But never su'd, or curs'd with bell or book. Dryden.

PA'RISH. adj.

1. Belonging to the parish; having the care of the parish.

A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,

An awful, reverend, and religious man. Dryden.

Not parish clerk, who calls the psalms so clear. Gay.

The office of the church is performed by the parish priest, at the time of his interment. Ayliffe.

A man after his natural death, was not capable of the least parish office. Arbutnot.

The parish allowance to poor people, is very seldom a comfortable maintenance. Law.

2. Maintained by the parish.

The ghost and the parish girl are entire new characters. Gay.

PAR'ISHIONER. n. s. [paroissien, Fr. from parish.] One that belongs to the parish.

I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutored by you. Shakspeare.

Hail bishop Valentine, whose day this is,
All the air is thy diocese;

And all the chirping choristers
And other birds are thy parishioners. Donne.

In the greater out-parishes, many of the parishioners, through neglect, do perish. Graunt.

I have deposited thirty marks, to be distributed among the poor parishioners. Addison.

PAR'ITOR. n. s. [for apparitor.] A beadle; a summoner of the courts of civil law.

You shall be summoned by an host of paritours;

you shall be sentenced in the spiritual court. Dryden.

PAR'ITY. n. s. [parité, Fr. paritas, Lat.] Equality; resemblance.

We may here justly tax the dishonesty and shamefulness of the mouths, who have upbraided us with the opinion of a certain stoical parity of sins. Hall.

That Christ or his apostles ever commanded to set up such a parity of presbyters, and in such a way as those Scots endeavour, I think is not very disputable. King Charles.

Survey the total set of animals, and we may, in their legs or organs of progression, observe an equality of length and parity of numeration; not any to have an odd leg, or the movers of one side not exactly answered by the other. Brown.

Those accidental occurrences, which excited Socrates to the discovery of such an invention, might fall in with that man that is of a perfect parity with Socrates. Hale.

Their agreement, in essential characters, makes rather an identity than a parity. Glanville.

Women could not live in that parity and equality of expence with their husbands, as now they do. Graunt.

By an exact parity of reason, we may argue, if a man has no sense of those kindnesses that pass upon him, from one like himself, whom he sees and knows, how much less shall his heart be affected with the grateful sense of his favours, whom he con-verses with only by imperfect speculations, by the discourses of reason, or the discoveries of faith? South.

PARK. n. f. [παρκο, Sax. parc, French.] A piece of ground enclosed and stored with wild beasts of chase, which a man may have by prescription or the king's grant.

Manwood, in his forest-law, defines it thus: a park is a place for privilege for wild beasts of venery, and also for other wild beasts that are beasts of the forest and of the chase: and those wild beasts are to have a firm peace and protection there, so that no man may hurt or chase them within the park, without license of the owner: a park is of another nature, than either a chase or a warren; for a park must be inclosed, and may not lie open; if it does, it is a good cause of seizure into the king's hands: and the owner cannot have action against such as hunt in his park, if it lies open. Corwell.

We have parks and inclosures of all sorts of beasts and birds, which we use not only for view or rareness, but likewise for dissections and trials. Bacon.

To PARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To enclose as in a park.

How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?
A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shaksp.

PA'RKER. n. f. [from park.] A park-keeper. Ainsworth.

PARKLEAVES. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.

PARLE. n. f. [from parler, Fr.] Conversation; talk; oral treaty; oral discussion of any thing.

Of all the gentlemen,
That every day with parle encounter me,
In thy opinion, which is worthiest love? Shaksp.

Our trumpet call'd you to this general parle. Shak.

The bishop, by a parle, is, with a show
Of combination, cunningly betray'd. Daniel.

Why meet we thus, like wrangling advocates,
To urge the justice of our cause with words?
I hate this parle; 'tis tame: if we must meet,
Give me my arms. Rowe.

To PARLEY. v. n. [from parler, French.] To treat by word of mouth; to talk; to discuss any thing orally. It is much used in war for a meeting of enemies to talk.

A Turk desired the captain to send some, with whom they might more conveniently parley. Knolles.

He parleys with her a while, as imagining the would advise him to proceed. Broomer.

PARLEY. n. f. [from the verb.] Oral treaty; talk; conference; discussion by word of mouth.

Seek rather by parley to recover them, than by the sword. Sidney.

Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley;
A rotten case abides no handling. Shaksp.

Summon a parley, we will talk with him. Shaksp.

Let us resolve never to have any parley with our lusts, but to make some considerable progress in our repentance. Calamy.

Parley and holding intelligence with guilt in the most trivial things, he pronounced as treason to ourselves, as well as unto God. Fell.

No gentle means could be essay'd;
'Twas beyond parley when the siege was laid. Dryd.

Force never yet a generous heart did gain;
We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain. Dryden.

Yet when some better fated youth
Shall with his am'rous parley move thee,
Reflect one moment on his truth,
Who, dying thus, persists to love thee. Prior.

PARLIAMENT. n. f. [parliamentum, low Latin; parlement, Fr.] In England, is the assembly of the king and three estates of the realm; namely, the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and commons, for the debating of matters touching the commonwealth, especially the making and correcting of laws; which assembly or court is, of all others, the highest, and of greatest authority. Corwell.

The king is fled to London,
To call a present court of parliament. Shaksp.

Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,
To make a shambles of the parliament house. Shaksp.

The true use of parliaments is very excellent; and be often called, and continued as long as is necessary. Bacon.

I thought the right way of parliaments the most safe for my crown, as best pleasing to my people. King Charles.

These are mob readers: if Virgil and Martial stood for parliament men, we know who would carry it. Dryden.

PARLIAMENTARY. adj. [from parliament.] Enacted by parliament; pertaining to parliament.

To the three first titles of the two houses, or lines, and conquest, were added two more; the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon.

Many things, that obtain as common law, had their original by parliamentary acts or constitutions, made in writings by the king, lords, and commons. Hale.

Credit to run ten millions in debt, without parliamentary security, I think to be dangerous and illegal. Swift.

PARLOUR. n. f. [parloir, Fr. parlatorio, Italian.]

1. A room in monasteries, where the religious meet and converse.
2. A room in houses on the first floor, elegantly furnished for reception or entertainment.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for a man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Hooker.

Back again fair Alma led them right,
And soon into a goodly parlour brought. Spenser.

It would be infinitely more shameful, in the dress of the kitchen, to receive the entertainments of the parlour. South.

Roof and fides were like a parlour made
A soft recess, and a cool summer shade. Dryden.

The first, forgive my verse if too diffuse,
Perform'd the kitchen's and the parlour's use;
The second, better bolted and immur'd,
From wolves his out-door family secur'd. Harte.

PARLOUS. adj. [This might seem to come from parler, Fr. to speak; but Junius derives it, I think rightly, from perilous, in which it answers to the Latin improbus.] Keen; sprightly; waggish.

Midas durst communicate
To none but to his wife his ears of state;
One must be trusted, and he thought her fit,
As passing prudent, and a parlous wit. Dryden.

PARLOUSNESS. n. f. [from parlous.] Quickness; keenness of temper.

PARMA-CITTY. n. f. Corruptedly for sperma ceti. Ainsworth.

PARNEL. n. f. [The diminutive of patronella.] A punk; a slut. Obsolete. Skinner.

PAROCHIAL. adj. [parochialis, from parochia, low Lat.] Belonging to a parish.

The married state of parochial pastors hath given them the opportunity of setting a more exact and universal pattern of holy living, to the people committed to their charge. Atterbury.

PARODY. n. f. [parodie, Fr. παρωδια.] A kind of writing, in which the words of an author or his thoughts are taken, and by a slight change adapted to some new purpose.

The imitations of the ancients are added together with some of the parodies and allusions to the most excellent of the moderns. Pope.

To PARODY. v. a. [parodier, French; from parody.] To copy by way of parody.

P A R

I have translated, or rather parodied, a poem of Horace, in which I introduce you advising me. Pope.

PAROLE. n. f. [parole, Fr.] Word given as an assurance; promise given by a prisoner not to go away.

Love's votaries enthrall each other's soul,
Till both of them live but upon parole. Cleveland.

Be very tender of your honour, and not fall in love; because I have a scruple whether you can keep your parole, if you become a prisoner to the ladies. Swift.

PARONOMA'SIA. n. f. [παρωνομασία.] A rhetorical figure, in which, by the change of a letter or syllable, several things are alluded to. It is called in Latin, agnominatio. Diä.

PARONYCHIA. n. f. [παρωνυχία; paronychie, Fr.] A preternatural swelling or sore under the root of the nail in one's finger; a felon; a whitlow. Diä.

PARONYMOUS. adj. [παρωνυμος.] Resembling another word.

Shew your critical learning in the etymology of terms, the synonymous and the paronymous or kindred names. Watts.

PAROQUET. n. f. [parroquet, or perroquet, Fr.] A small species of parrot.

The great, red and blue, are parrots; the middlemost, called popinjays; and the lesser, parquets; in all above twenty sorts. Grew.

I would not give my parquet
For all the doves that ever flew. Prior.

PAROTID. adj. [parotide, Fr. παρωτίς, παρὰ and ὠτίς.] Salivary: so named because near the ears.

Beasts and birds, having one common use of spittle, are furnished with the parotid glands, which help to supply the mouth with it. Grew.

Being heavy, he should not tread stiff, but have a pastern made him, to break the force of the weight: by this his body hangs on the hoof, as a coach doth by the leathers. Greene.

2. The leg of a human creature in contempt.

So straight she walk'd, and on her pasterns high: If seeing her behind, he lik'd her pace, Now turning short, he better lik'd her face. Dryden.

PASTIL. n. f. [paſtillus, Lat. paſtille, Fr.] A roll of paste.

To draw with dry colours, make long pastils, by grinding red lead with strong wort, and so roll them up like pencils, drying them in the sun. Peaſham.

PASTIME. n. f. [paſs and time.] Sport; amusement; diversion.

It was more requisite for Zelmane's hurt to rest, than sit up at those pastimes; but she, that felt no wound but one, earnestly desired to have the pastorals. Sidney.

I'll be as patient as a gentle stream, And make a pastime of each weary step, Till the last step has brought me to my love. Shakspeare.

Pastime passing excellent, If husbanded with modesty. Shakspeare.

With these Find pastime, and bear rule; thy realm is large. Milton.

A man, much addicted to luxury, recreation, and pastime, should never pretend to devote himself entirely to the sciences, unless his soul be so refined, that he can taste these entertainments eminently in his closet. Watts.

PASTOR. n. f. [paſtor, Lat. paſteur, old Fr.]

1. A shepherd.

Receive this present by the muses made, The pipe on which the Aſcraean paſtor play'd. Dry.

The paſtor shears their hoary beards, And eases of their hair the laden herds. Dryden.

2. A clergyman who has the care of a flock; one who has souls to feed with sound doctrine.

The paſtor maketh suits of the people, and they with one voice testify a general assent thereunto, or he joyfully beginneth, and they with like alacrity follow, dividing between them the sentences where-with they strive, which shall much shew his own, and stir up others zeal to the glory of God. Hooker.

The first branch of the great work belonging to a paſtor of the church, was to teach. South.

All bishops are pastors of the common flock. Lesley.

A breach in the general form of worship was reckoned too unpopular to be attempted, neither was the expedient then found out of maintaining separate pastors out of private purses. Swift.

PASTORAL. adj. [paſtoralis, Lat. paſtoral, French.]

1. Rural; rustick; beſeeming shepherds; imitating shepherds.

PASTURABLE. adj. [from pasture.] Fit for pasture.

PASTURAGE. n. f. [paſtorage, Fr.]

1. The business of feeding cattle.

I wish there were ordinances, that whosoever keepeth twenty kine, should keep a plough going; for otherwise all men would fall to pasturage, and none to husbandry. Spenser.

2. Lands grazed by cattle.

France has a sleep by her to shew, that the riches of the country consisted chiefly in flocks and pasturage. Addison.

3. The use of pasture.

Cattle fattened by good pasturage, after violent motion, die suddenly. Arbutnot.

PASTURE. n. f. [paſture, Fr.]

1. Food; the act of feeding.

Unto the conversation is required a solid pasture, and a food congenerous unto nature. Brown.

2. Ground on which cattle feed.

A careless herd, Full of the pasture, jumps along by him, And never stays. Shakspeare.

When there was not room for their herds to feed together, they, by consent, separated and enlarged their pasture where it best liked them. Locke.

The new tribes look abroad On nature's common, far as they can see Or wing, their range and pasture. Thomson.

3. Human culture; education. Not used.

From the first pastures of our infant age, To elder cares and man's severer page We lash the pupil. Dryden.

TO PASTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To place in a pasture.

TO PASTURE. v. n. [from the noun.] To graze on the ground.

The cattle in the fields and meadows green Those rare and solitary; these in flocks Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upspring. Milton.

PASTY. n. f. [paſte, Fr.] A pie of crust raised without a dish.

Of the paste a coffin will I rear, And make two pasties of your shameful heads. Shakspeare.

I will confess what I know; if ye pinch me like a paſty, I can say no more. Shakspeare.

If you'd fright an alderman and mayor, Within a paſty lodge a living hare. King.

A man of sober life, Not quite a madman, though a paſty fellow, And much too wise to walk into a well. Pope.

PAT. adj. [from pas, Dutch, Skinner.] Fit; convenient; exactly suitable either as to time or place. This is a low word, and should not be used but in burlesque writings.

Pat pat; and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal. Shakspeare.

Now I might do it pat, now he is praying. Shakspeare.

They never saw two things so pat, In all respects, as this and that. Hudibras.

Zuinglius dreamed of a text, which he found very pat to his doctrine of the Eucharist. Atterbury.

He was sorely put to't at the end of a verse, Because he could find no word to come pat in. Swift.

PAT. n. f. [patte, Fr. is a foot, and thence pat may be a blow with the foot.]

1. A light quick blow; a tap.

The least noise is enough to disturb the operation of his brain; the pat of a shuttle-cock, or the creaking of a jack will do. Collier.

2. A small lump of matter beat into shape with the hand.

TO PAT. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike lightly; to tap.

Children prove, whether they can rub upon the breast with one hand, and pat upon the forehead with another, and straightways they pat with both. Bacon.

Gay pats my shoulder, and you vanish quite. Pope.

PATACHE. n. f. A small ship. Ainſworth.

PATACON. n. f. A Spanish coin worth four shillings and eight pence English. Ainſworth.

TO PATCH. v. n. [pudzer, Danish; pez-zare, Italian.]

1. To cover with a piece sewed on.

They would think themselves miserable in a patched coat, and yet their minds appear in a pie-bald livery of coarse patches and borrowed shreds. Locke.

2. To decorate the face with small spots of black silk.

In the middle boxes, were several ladies who patched both sides of their faces. Spectator.

We begg'd her but to patch her face, She never hit one proper place. Swift.

3. To mend clumsily; to mend so as that the original strength or beauty is lost.

Any thing mended, is but patch'd. Shakspeare.

P A T

Phyick can but mend our crazy state,
Patch an old building, not a new create. Dryden.
Broken limbs, common prudence sends us to the surgeons to piece and patch up. L'Estrange.

4. To make up of shreds or different pieces.
Sometimes with up emphatical.
If we seek to judge of those times, which the scriptures set us down without error, by the reigns of the Assyrian princes, we shall but patch up the story at adventure, and leave it in confusion. Raleigh.
His glorious end was a patch'd work of fate,
Ill sort'd with a soft effeminate life. Dryden.
There is that visible symmetry in a human body,
as gives an intrinsic evidence, that it was not formed successively and patch'd up by piece-meal. Bentley.
Enlarging an author's sense, and building fancies of our own upon his foundation, we may call paraphrasing; but more properly changing, adding, patching, piecing. Felton.

PATCH. n. f. [pezzo, Italian.]
1. A piece sewed on to cover a hole.
Patches set upon a little breach,
Discredit more in hiding of the flaw;
Than did the flaw before it was so patch'd. Shaksp.
If the shoe be ript, or patches put;
He's wounded! see the plaister on his foot. Dryd.
2. A piece inserted in mosaick or variegated work.
They suffer their minds to appear in a pye-bald livery of coarse patches and borrowed shreds, such as the common opinion of those they converse with clothe them in. Locke.
3. A small spot of back silk put on the face.
How! providence! and yet a Scottish crew!
Then madam Nature wears black patches too. Clea.
If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd,
Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud.
Suckling.
They were patched differently, and cast hostile glances upon one another, and their patches were placed in different situations as party signals to distinguish friends from foes. Addison.
This the morning omens seem'd to tell;
Thrice from my trembling hand the patch-box fell.
Pope.
4. A small particle; a parcel of land.
We go to gain a little patch of ground,
That hath in it no profit but the name. Shaksp.
5. A paltry fellow. Obsolete.
What a py'd ninny's this? thou scurvy patch!
Shaksp.

PA'TCHER. n. f. [from patch.] One that patches; a botcher.
PA'TCHERY. n. f. [from patch.] Botchery; bungling work; forgery. A word not in use.
You hear him cogg, see him dissemble,
Know his gross patchery, love him, and feed him,
Yet remain assur'd that he's a made-up villain.
Shaksp.

PA'TCHWORK. n. f. [patch and work.]
Work made by sewing small pieces of different colours interchangeably together.
When my cloaths were finished, they looked like the patchwork, only mine were all of a colour.
Swift.
Whoever only reads to transcribe shining remarks, without entering into the genius and spirit of the author, will be apt to be misled out of the regular way of thinking; and all the product of all this will be found a manifest incoherent piece of patchwork.
Swift.
Foreign her air, her robe's discordant pride
In patchwork flutt'ring. Pope.
To patch-work learn'd quotations are ally'd,
Both strive to make our poverty our pride. Young.

PATE. n. f. [This is derived by Skinner from tête, Fr.] The head. Now commonly used in contempt or ridicule; but anciently in serious language.
Senseless man, that himself doth hate,
To love another;
Here take thy lover's token on thy pate. Spenser.
Behold the despair,

P A T

By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tusser.
He is a traitor, let him to the tower,
And crop away that factious pate of his. Shaksp.
Steal by line and level is an excellent pass of pate.
Shaksp.

That fly devil,
That broker that still breaks the pate of faith,
That daily breakvow. Shaksp.
Who dares
Say this man is a flatterer? The learned pate Ducks to the golden fool. Shaksp.
Thank your gentler fate,
That, for a bruise'd or broken pate,
Has freed you from those knobs that grow
Much harder on the married brow. Hudibras.
If only scorn attends men for asserting the church's dignity, many will rather chuse to neglect their duty, than to get a broken pate in the church's service. South.
If any young novice happens into the neighbourhood of flatterers, presently they are plying his full purse and empty pate with addresses suitable to his vanity. South.

PA'TED. adj. [from pate.] Having a pate.
It is used only in composition: as, longpated or cunning; shallow-pated or foolish.

Act or state of opening. Ainsw.

PA'TEN. n. f. [patina, Latin.] A plate.
Not in use.
The floor of heav'n
Is thick inlaid with patens of bright gold;
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings. Shaksp.

PA'TENT. adj. [patens, Lat. patent, Fr.]
1. Open to the perusal of all: as, letters patent.
In Ireland, where the king disposes of bishopricks merely by his letters patent, without any Congé d'Elire, which is still kept up in England; though to no other purpose, than to shew the ancient right of the church to elect her own bishops. Lesley.
2. Appropriated by letters patent.
Madder is esteemed a commodity that will turn to good profit; so that, in king Charles the first's time, it was made a patent commodity. Mortimer.

PA'TENT. n. f. A writ conferring some exclusive right or privilege.
If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; if it touch not you, it comes near no body. Shaksp.
So will I grow, so live, so die,
Ere I will yield my virgin patent up Unto his lordship. Shaksp.
We are censured as obstinate, in not complying with a royal patent. Swift.

PATENTEE. n. f. [from patent.] One who has a patent.
If his tenant and patentee dispose of his gift, without his kingly consent, the lands shall revert to the king. Bacon.

Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me
Hold thee. Shaksp.
Grace signifies the paternal favour of God to his elect children. Hammond.
Admonitions fraternal or paternal of his fellow christians or governors of the church. Hammond.
They spend their days in joy unblam'd; and dwell
Long time in peace, by families and tribes,
Under paternal rule. Milton.
2. Hereditary; received in succession from one's father.

P A T

Men plough with oven of their own
Their small paternal field of corn. Dryden.
He held his paternal estate from the bounty of the conqueror. Dryden.
Retreat betimes
To thy paternal seat, the Sabine field,
Where the great Cato toil'd with his own hands.
Addison.

PATERNITY. n. f. [from paternus, Latin;
paternité, French.] Fathership; the relation of a father.
The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership.
Raleigh.
A young heir, kept short by his father, might be known by his countenance; in this case, the paternity and filiation leave very sensible impressions. Arb.
This origination in the divine paternity, as bishop Pearson speaks, hath antiently been looked upon as the assertion of the unity. Waterland.

PATH. n. f. [pad, Saxon.] Way; road; track. In conversation it is used of a narrow way to be passed on foot; but in solemn language means any passage.
For darkness, where is the place thereof? That thou shouldst know the paths to the house thereof.
Job.
On the glad earth the golden age renew,
And thy great father's path to heav'n pursue. Dryd.
The dewy paths of meadows we will tread. Dryd.
There is but one road by which to climb up, and they have a very severe law against any that enters the town by another path, lest any new one should be worn on the mountain. Addison.

PATHE'TICAL. } adj. [παθήτικός; pathe- PATHE'TICK. } tique, Fr.] Affecting the passions; passionate; moving.
His page that handful of wit;
'Tis most pathetical. Shaksp.
How pathetick is that expostulation of Job, when,
for the trial of his patience, he was made to look upon himself in this deplorable condition. Spektor.
Tully considered the dispositions of a sincere and less mercurial nation, by dwelling on the pathetick part. Swift.
While thus pathetick to the prince he spoke,
From the brave youth the streaming passion broke.
Pope.

PATHE'TICALLY. adv. [from pathetical.]
In such a manner as may strike the passions.
These reasons, so pathetically urged and so admirably raised by the prosopopoeia of nature, speaking to her children with so much authority, deserve the pains I have taken. Dryden.

PATHE'TICALNESS. n. f. [from pathetical.] Quality of being pathetick; quality of moving the passions.

PA'THLESS. adj. [from path.] Untrodden;
not marked with paths.
Ask thou the citizens of pathless woods;
What cut the air with wings, what swim in floods?
Sandys.
Like one that hath been led astray.
Through the heav'n's wide pathless way. Milton.
In fortune's empire blindly thus we go,
And wander after pathless destiny,
Whose dark resorts since prudence cannot know,
In vain it would provide. Dryden.
Through mists obscure she wings her tedious way,
Now wanders dazzled with too bright a day;
And from the summit of a pathless coast Sees infinite, and in that sight is lost. Prior.

PATHOGNOMONICK. adj. [παθονομονικός, πάθος and νόμος.] Such signs of a disease as are inseparable, designing the essence or real nature of the disease; not symptomack. Quincy.

They open'd camps deform'd by civil fight. Prior.

PA'TIENT. n. f. [patient, French.]

1. That which receives impressions from external agents.

Malice is a passion so impetuous and precipitate, that it often involves the agent and the patient. Government of the Tongue

P A T

To proper patients he kind agents brings,
In various leagues binds disagreeing things. Creech.

Action and passion are modes which belong to substances: when a smith with a hammer strikes a piece of iron, the hammer and the smith are both agents or subjects of action; the one supreme, and the other subordinate: the iron is the patient or the subject of passion, in a philosophical sense, because it receives the operation of the agent. Watts.

2. A person diseased. It is commonly used of the relation between the sick and the physician.

You deal with me like a physician, that seeing his patient in a pestilent fever, should chide instead of administering help, and bid him be sick no more. Sidney.

Through ignorance of the disease, through unreasonableness of the time, instead of good he worketh hurt, and out of one evil throweth the patient into many miseries. Spenser.

A physician uses various methods for the recovery of sick persons; and though all of them are disagreeable, his patients are never angry. Addison.

3. It is sometimes, but rarely, used absolutely for a sick person.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate
With golden canopies or beds of state;
But the poor patient will as soon be found
On the hard matress or the mother ground. Dryd.

It is wonderful to observe, how inapprehensive these patients are of their disease, and backward to believe their case is dangerous. Blackmore.

To PA'TIENT. v. a. [patienter, Fr.] To compose one's self; to behave with patience. Obsolete.

Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me. Shaks.

PA'TIENTLY. adv. [from patient.]

So spake the patriarch of mankind; but Eve Persisted, yet submissive. Milton.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees;
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dryd.

2. A bishop superiour to archbishops.

The patriarchs for an hundred years had been of one house, to the prejudice of the church, and there yet remained one bishop of the same kindred. Raleig.

Where secular primates were heretofore given, the ecclesiastical laws have ordered patriarchs and ecclesiastical primates to be placed. Ayliffe.

PATRIARCHAL. adj. [patriarchal, French; from patriarch.]

1. Belonging to patriarchs; such as was possessed or enjoyed by patriarchs.

Such drowsy sedentary souls have they,
Who would to patriarchal years live on,
Fix'd to hereditary clay,
And know no climate but their own. Norris.

Nimrod enjoyed this patriarchal power; but he against right enlarged his empire, by seizing violently on the rights of other lords. Locke.

P A T

2. Belonging to hierarchical patriarchs.

Archbishops or metropolitans in France are immediately subject to the pope's jurisdiction; and, in other places, they are immediately subject to the patriarchal sees. Ayliffe.

A fencer and the scandal of the town. Dryden.

Your daughters are all married to wealthy patricians. Swift.

PATRIMONIAL. adj. [patrimonial, French; from patrimony.] Possessed by inheritance.

The expence of the duke of Ormond's own great patrimonial estate, that came over at that time, is of no small consideration in the stock of this kingdom. Temple.

Their patrimonial sloth the Spaniards keep,
And Philip first taught Philip how to sleep. Dryden.

PATRIMONIALLY. adv. [from patrimonial.] By inheritance.

Good princes have not only made a distinction between what was their own patrimonially, as the civil law books term it, and what the state had an interest in. Davenant.

PATRIMONY. n. f. [patrimonium, Lat. patrimoine, Fr.] An estate possessed by inheritance.

Inclosures they would not forbid, for that had been to forbid the improvement of the patrimony of the kingdom. Bacon.

So might the heir, whose father hath, in play,
Wasted a thousand pounds of ancient rent,
By painful earning of one groat a day,
Hope to restore the patrimony spent. Davies.

In me all
Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimony
That I must leave ye, sons. Milton.

For his redemption, all my patrimony
I am ready to forego and quit. Milton.

Their ships like wasted patrimonies shew;
Where the thin scatt'ring trees admit the light,
And shun each other's shadows as they grow. Dryd.

The shepherd last appears,
And with him all his patrimony bears;
His house and household gods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden.

PATRIOT. n. f.

1. One whose ruling passion is the love of his country.

Patriots who for sacred freedom stood. Tickel.

The firm patriot there,
Who made the welfare of mankind his care,
Shall know he conquer'd. Addison.

Here tears shall flow from a more gen'rous cause.
Such tears as patriots shed for dying laws. Pope.

2. It is sometimes used for a factious disturber of the government.

PATRIOTISM. n. f. [from patriot.] Love of one's country; zeal for one's country.

To PATROCINATE. v. a. [patrociner, Lat. patrociner, old Fr.] To patronise; to protect; to defend. Diſt.

PATROL. n. f. [patrouille, patsuille, old French.]

1. The act of going the rounds in a garrison to observe that orders are kept.
2. Those that go the rounds.
O thou! by whose almighty nod the scale
Of empire rises, or alternate falls,
Send forth the saving virtues round the land
In bright patrol. Thomson.

TO PATROL. v. n. [patrouiller, Fr.] To go the rounds in a camp or garrison.

These outguards of the mind are sent abroad,
And still patrolling beat the neighb'ring road;
Or to the parts remote obedient fly,
Keep posts advanc'd, and on the frontier lie. Blackm.

PATRON. n. f. [patron, Fr. patronus, Lat.]

1. One who countenances, supports, or protects. Commonly a wretch who supports with insolence, and is paid with flattery.
I'll plead for you, as for my patron. Shakspeare.
Ne'er let me pass in silence Dorset's name;
Ne'er cease to mention the continu'd debt,
Which the great patron only would forget. Prior.

2. A guardian saint.
Thou amongst those saints, whom thou do'st see,
Shall be a saint, and thine own nation's friend
And patron. Spenser.
St. Michael is mentioned as the patron of the Jews, and is now taken by the Christians, as the protector general of our religion. Dryden.

3. Advocate; defender; vindicator.
We are no patrons of those things; the best defence whereof is speedy redress and amendment. Hooker.

Whether the minds of men have naturally imprinted on them the ideas of extension and number, I leave to those who are the patrons of innate principles. Locke.

4. One who has donation of ecclesiastical preferment.
Far more the patrons than the clerks inflame,
Patrons of sense afraid, but not of vice,
Or swoln with pride, or sunk in avarice. Wesley.

PATRONAGE. n. f. [from patron.]

1. Support; protection.
Lady, most worthy of all duty, how falls it out, that you, in whom all virtue shines, will take the patronage of fortune, the only rebellious handmaid against virtue? Sidney.

Here's patronage, and here our heart desires,
What breaks its bonds, what draws the closer ties,
Shows what rewards our services may gain,
And how too often we may court in vain. Creech.

2. Guardianship of saints.
From certain passages of the poets, several ships made choice of some god or other for their guardians, as among the Roman catholics every vessel is recommended to the patronage of some particular saint. Addison.

3. Donation of a benefice; right of conferring a benefice.

TO PATRONAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To patronise; to protect. A bad word.
Dar'st thou maintain the former words thou spak'st?—

—Yes, sir, as well as you dare patronage
The envious barking of your saucy tongue. Shakspeare.

An out-law in a castle keeps,
And uses it to patronage his theft. Shakspeare.

PATRONAL. adj. [from patronus, Lat.]
Protecting; supporting; guarding; defending; doing the office of a patron.

The name of the city being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and patronal gods might be called forth by charms. Brown.

PATRONESS. n. f. [feminine of patron; patrona, Lat.]

1. A female that defends, countenances, or supports.

Of close escapes the aged patroness,
Blacker than earth, her sable mantle spread,
When with two trusty maids in great distress,
Both from mine uncle and my realm I fled. Fairfax.

All things should be guided by her direction, as the sovereign patroness and protectress of the enterprise. Bacon.

Befriend me night, best patroness of grief,
Over the pole thy thickest mantle throw. Milton.
He petitioned his patroness, who gave him for answer, that providence had assigned every bird its proportion. L'Estrange.

It was taken into the protection of my patroness at court. Swift.

2. A female guardian saint.
 3. A woman that has the gift of a benefice.
- TO PATRONISE. v. a. [from patron.] To protect; to support; to defend; to countenance.

Churchmen are to be had in due respect for their work sake, and protected from scorn; but if a clergyman be loose and scandalous, he must not be patronised nor winked at. Bacon.

All tenderness of conscience against good laws, is hypocrisy, and patronised by none but men of design, who look upon it as the fittest engine to get into power. South.

I have been esteemed and patronised by the grandfather, the father, and the son. Dryden.

PATRONYMICK. n. f. [πατρωνυμικός, patronymique, Fr.] Name expressing the name of the father or ancestor: as, Tydidēs, the son of Tydeus.

It ought to be rendered the son, Tectonides being a patronymick. Broome.

PATTEN of a pillar. n. f. Its base. Ainsworth.

PATTEN. n. f. [patin, Fr.] A shoe of wood with an iron ring, worn under the common shoe by women, to keep them from the dirt.

Their shoes and pattens are snouted and piked more than a finger long, crooking upwards, which they call crackowes, which were fastened to the knees with chains of gold and silver. Camden.

Good housewives
Underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe through the wet on clinking pattens tread. Gay.

PATTENMAKER. n. f. [patten and maker.]
He that makes pattens.

TO PATTEN. v. n. [from patte, Fr. the foot.] To make a noise like the quick steps of many feet.

Patt'ring hail comes pouring on the main,
When Jupiter descends in harden'd rain. Dryden.
The stealing shower is scarce to patter heard
By such as wander through the forest walks. Thomson.

PATTERN. n. f. [patron, French; patroon, Dutch.]

1. The original proposed to imitation; the archetype; that which is to be copied; an exemplar.

As though your desire were, that the churches of old should be patterns for us to follow, and even glasses wherein we might see the practice of that which by you is gathered out of scripture. Hooker.

I will be the pattern of all patience;
I will say nothing. Shakspeare.

A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed. Shakspeare.

The example and pattern of the church of Rome. Clarendon.

Lose not the honour you have early won,
But stand the blameless pattern of a son. Dryden.
Measure the excellency of a virtuous mind; not as it is the copy, but the pattern of regal power. Grew.

Patterns to rule by are to be sought for out of good, not loose reigns. Davenant.

This pattern should be our guide, in our present state of pilgrimage. Atterbury.

Christianity commands us to act after a nobler pattern than the virtues even of the most perfect men. Rogers.

Take pattern by our sister star,
Delude at once and bless our sight;
When you are seen, be seen from far,
And chiefly chuse to shine by night. Swift.

2. A specimen; a part shown as a sample of the rest.

A gentleman sends to my shop for a pattern of stuff; if he like it, he compares the pattern with the whole piece, and probably we bargain. Swift.

3. An instance; an example.
What God did command touching Canaan, the same concerneth not us otherwise than only as a fearful pattern of his just displeasure against sinful nations. Hooker.

4. Any thing cut out in paper to direct the cutting of cloth.

TO PATTERN. v. a. [patronner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To make in imitation of something; to copy.

Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt,
Pattern'd by that the poet here describes. Shakspeare.

2. To serve as an example to be followed.
Neither sense is now much in use.

When I that censure him do so offend,
Let mine own judgment pattern out my death,
And nothing come in partial. Shakspeare.

PA'VAN. } n. f. A kind of light tripping

PAUCITY. [paucitas, from paucus, Lat.]

1. Fewness; smallness of number.
The multitude of parishes, and paucity of schools. Hooker.

In such slender corpuscles as those of colour, may easily be conceived a greater paucity of protuberant corpuscles. Boyle.

Socrates well understood what he said touching the rarity and paucity of friends. L'Estrange.

2. Smallness of quantity.

This paucity of blood is agreeable to many other animals, as lizards, frogs, and other fishes. Brown.

TO PAVE. v. a. [pavio, Lat. paver, Fr.]

1. To lay with brick or stone; to floor with stone.

Should she kneel down,
Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break,
And take her hence in horror. Shakspeare.

Let not the court be paved, for that striketh up a great heat in summer, and much cold in winter. Bacon.

From this chymic flame
I see a city of more precious mould,
With silver pav'd, and all divines with gold. Dryden.

The streets are paved with brick or freestone. Addison.

2. To make a passage easy.

It might open and pave a prepared way to his own title. Bacon.

PA'VEMENT. n. f. [pavimentum, Latin.]
Stones or bricks laid on the ground; stone floor. Floor is used of stone, but pavement never of wood.

The marble pavement closes, he is enter'd
Into his radiant roof. Shakspeare.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars seen in the galaxy. Milton.

The long laborious pavement here he treads,
That to proud Rome th' admiring nations leads. Addison.

The foundation of Roman ways was made of rough stone joined together with cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of the lower stratum in which the stones of the upper pavement were fixed: for there can be no very durable pavement, but a double one. Arbutnot.

PA'VER. } n. f. [from pave.] One who

PA'VIER. } lays with stones.

For thee the sturdy paver thumps the ground,
Whilst ev'ry stroke his lab'ring lungs resound. Gay.

PAVILION. n. f. [pavillon, Fr.] A tent; a temporary or moveable house.

Flowers being under the trees, the trees were to them a pavilion, and the flowers to the trees a mosaical floor. Sidney.

She did lie
In her pavilion, cloth of gold, of tissue. Shakspeare.

PAU

He, only he, heav'n's blew pavillon spreads,
And on the ocean's dancing billows treads. Sandys.
It was usual for the enemy, when there was a king in the field, to demand in what part of the camp he resided, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavilion. Addison.

The glowing fury springs,
Once more invades the guilty dome, and shrouds
Its bright pavilions in a veil of clouds. Pope.

PAVILION. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with tents.

Jacob in Mahanaim saw
The field pavilion'd with his guardians bright. Milton.

2. To be sheltered by a tent.

With his batt'ning flocks the careful swain
Abides pavilion'd on the grassy plain.

PAUNCH. n. f. [panse, Fr. pança, Span. panx, Lat.] The belly; the region of the guts.

Demades, the orator, was talkative, and would eat hard; Antipater would say of him, that he was like a sacrifice, that nothing was left of it but the tongue and the paunch. Bacon.

Pleading Matho born abroad for air,
With his fat paunch fills his new-fashion'd chair. Dryden.

PAUNCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To pierce or rip the belly; to exenterate;
to take out the paunch; to eviscerate.

who receives alms.

PAUSE. n. f. [pause, Fr. pausa, low Lat. pausa.]

1. A stop; a place or time of intermission.

Neither could we ever come to any pause, whereon to rest our assurance this way. Hooker.

Comes a fellow crying out for help,
And Cassio following with determin'd sword,
To execute upon him; this gentleman
Steps in to Cassio, and entreats his pause. Shaksp.
Some pause and respite only I require,
Till with my tears I shall have quench'd my fire. Denham.

The punishment must always be rigorously exacted, and the blows by pauses laid on till they reach the mind, and you perceive the signs of a true sorrow. Locke.

Whilst those exalted to primeval light,
Only perceive some little pause of joys
In those great moments when their god employs Their ministry. Prior.

What pause from woe, what hopes of comfort bring

The names of wife or great? Prior.

Our discourse is not kept up in conversation, but falls into more pauses and intervals than in our neighbouring countries. Addison.

2. Suspense; doubt.

Like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. Shaksp.

3. Break; paragraph; apparent separation of the parts of a discourse.

He writes with warmth, which usually neglects method, and those partitions and pauses which men, educated in the schools, observe. Locke.

4. Place of suspending the voice marked in writing thus —.

5. A stop or intermission in music.

PAUSE. v. n.

1. To wait; to stop; not to proceed; to forbear for a time, used both of speech and action.

Tarry; pause a day or two,
Before you hazard: for in chusing wrong
I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shaksp.

Give me leave to read philosophy,
And, while I pause, serve in your harmony. Shaksp.

PAW

Pausing a while, thus to herself she mus'd.
Milton.

As one who in his journey baits at noon,
Though bent on speed, so here th' archangel paus'd,
Between a world destroy'd and world restor'd. Milt.

2. To deliberate.

Bear Worcester to death, and Vernon too,
Other offenders we will pause upon. Shaksp.
Solyman, pausing a little upon the matter, the heat of his fury being over, suffered himself to be intreated. Knolles.

3. To be intermitted.

What awe did the slow solemn knell inspire,
The pealing organ, and the pausing choir,
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd! Tickel.

PAUSER. n. f. [from pause.] He who pauses; he who deliberates.

The expedition of my violent love
O outruns the pauser, reason. Shaksp.

PAW. n. f. [parwen, Welsh.]

1. The foot of a beast of prey.

One chose his ground,
Whence rushing he might surest seize them both,
Grip'd in each paw. Milton.

The bear, that tears the prey, and when pursued, left he become a prey, goes backward into his den that the hunter rather mistakes, than finds the way of his paw. Holyday.

The bee and serpent know their stings, and the bear the use of his paws. More against Atheism.

If lions had been brought up to painting, where you have one lion under the feet of a man, you should have had twenty men under the paw of a lion. L'Estrange.

Each claims possession,
For both their paws are fastened on the prey. Dryden.

2. Hand. In contempt.

Be civil to the wretch imploring,
And lay your paws upon him without roaring. Dryden.

PAW. v. n. [from the noun.] To draw the fore foot along the ground.

The fiery courser, when he hears from far
The sprightly trumpets and the shouts of war,
Pricks up his ears, and trembling with delight Shifts place, and paws, and hopes the promis'd fight. Dryden.

Th' impatient courser pants in every vein,
And pawing, seems to beat the distant plain,
Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost. Pope.
Once, a fiery horse, pawing with his hoof, struck a hole in my handkerchief. Swift.

PAW. v. a.

1. To strike with a drawn stroke of the fore foot.

His hot courser paw'd th' Hungarian plain,
And adverse legions stood the shock in vain. Tickel.

2. To handle roughly.

3. To fawn; to flatter. Ainsworth.

PAWED. adj. [from paw.]

2. Broad footed.

PAWN. n. f. [pand, Dut. pan, French.]

1. Something given to pledge as a security for money borrowed or promise made.

Her oath for love, her honour's pawn. Shaksp.
As for mortgaging and pawning, men will not take pawns without use; or they will look for the forfeiture. Bacon.

He retains much of his primitive esteem, that abroad his very word will countervail the bond or pawn of another. Howel.

Here's the very heart, and soul, and life-blood of Gomez; pawns in abundance, till the next bribe helps their husbands to redeem them. Dryden.

2. The state of being pledged.

Sweet wife, my honour is at pawn,
And, but my going, nothing can redeem it. Shaksp.
Redeem from broking pawn the blemish'd crown, Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt. Shaksp.

3. A common man at chess.

PAY

Here I a pawn admire,
That still advancing high'r,
At top of all became Another thing and name. Cowley.

PAWN. v. a. [from the noun.] To pledge; to give in pledge. It is now seldom used but of pledges given for money.

I hold it cowardice

To rest mistrustful, where a noble heart
Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love. Shaksp.

Let's lead him on with a fine baited delay, till he hath pawn'd his horses. Shaksp.

I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour. Shaksp.
Will you thus break your faith?—

—I pawn'd you none:

I promis'd you redress. Shaksp.

I'll pawn the little blood which I have left,

To save the innocent. Shaksp.

If any thought annoys the gallant youth,
'Tis dear remembrance of that fatal glance,
For which he lately pawn'd his heart. Waller.

She who before had mortgag'd her estate,
And pawn'd the last remaining piece of plate. Dryden.

One part of the nation is pawned to the other,
with hardly a possibility of being ever redeemed. Swift.

PAWNBROKER. n. f. [pawn and broker.]

One who lends money upon pledge.

The usurers or money-changers were a sort of a scandalous employment at Rome; those money-scriveners seem to have been little better than our pawnbrokers. Arbutnot.

PAY. v. a. [paier, Fr. apagar, Span. pacare, Latin.]

1. To discharge a debt. It is applied to debts of duty, as well as debts of commerce.

You have done enough, and have perform'd
A saint-like sorrow; and indeed paid down
More penitence, than done trespass. Shaksp.

Your son has paid a soldier's debt;

He only liv'd but till he was a man. Shaksp.
She does what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all. Shaksp.

The king and prince

Then paid their off'rings in a sacred grove
To Hercules. Dryden.

An hundred talents of silver did the children of Ammon pay. 2 Chronicles.

I have peace-offerings with me; this day have I paid my vows. Proverbs.

due with his money: as, he had paid his labourers.

4. To atone; to make amends by suffering: with for before the cause of payment.

If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shaksp.

Bold Prometheus, whose untam'd desire Rival'd the sun with his own heav'nly fire,

Now doom'd the Scythian vulture's endless prey,
Severely pays for animating clay. Rowson.

Men of parts, who were to act according to the result of their debates, and often pay for their mistakes with their heads, found those scholastick forms of little use to discover truth. Locke.

5. To beat.

I follow'd me close, and, with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid. Shaksp.

Forty things more, my friends, which you know true,

For which, or pay me quickly, or I'll pay you. Ben Jonson.

6. To reward; to recompense.

She I love, or laughs at all my pain,
Or knows her worth too well; and pays me with disdain. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

7. To give the equivalent for any thing bought.

Riches are got by consuming less of foreign commodities, than what by commodities or labour is paid for. Locke.

It is very possible for a man that lives by cheating, to be very punctual in paying for what he buys; but then every one is assured that he does not do so out of any principle of true honesty. Law.

PAY. n. f. [from the verb.] Wages; hire; money given in return for service.

Come on, brave soldiers, doubt not of the day; And, that once gotten, doubt not of large pay. Shak.

The soldier is willing to be converted, for there is neither pay nor plunder to be got. L'Estrange.

Money, instead of coming over for the pay of the army, has been transmitted thither for the pay of those forces called from thence. Temple.

Here only merit constant pay receives, Is blest in what it takes, and what it gives. Pope.

PAYABLE. adj. [payable, Fr. from pay.]

1. Due; to be paid.

The marriage-money, the princess brought, was payable ten days after the solemnization. Bacon.

The farmer rates or compounds the sums of money payable to her majesty, for the alienation of lands, made without or by licence. Bacon.

2. Such as there is power to pay.

To repay by a return equivalent, is not in every one's power; but thanks are a tribute payable by the poorest. South.

PAYDAY. n. f. [pay and day.] Day on which debts are to be discharged, or wages paid.

Labourers pay away all their wages, and live upon trust till next payday. Locke.

PAYER. n. f. [paieur, Fr. from pay.] One that pays.

PAYMASTER. n. f. [pay and master.] One who is to pay; one from whom wages or reward is received.

Howsoever they may bear fail for a time, yet are they so sure paymasters in the end, that few have held out their lives safely. Hayward.

If we desire that God should approve us, it is a sign we do his work, and expect him our paymaster. Taylor.

PAYMENT. n. f. [from pay.]

1. The act of paying.

Persons of eminent virtue, when advanced, are less envied, for their fortune seemeth but due unto them; and no man envieth the payment of a debt. Bacon.

2. The thing given in discharge of debt or promise.

Thy husband commits his body To painful labour both by sea and land, And craves no other tribute at thy hands But love, fair looks, and true obedience; Too little payment for so great a debt. Shakespeare.

3. A reward.

Give her an hundred marks.— An hundred marks! by this light I'll ha' more. An ordinary groom is for such payment. Shakespeare.

The wages that sin bargains with the sinner, are life, pleasure, and profit; but the wages it pays him with, are death, torment, and destruction: he that would understand the falsehood and deceit of sin thoroughly, must compare its promises and its payments together. South.

4. Chastisement; sound beating. Ainsw.

PAYSE. v. n. [Used by Spenser for poise.] To balance.

Ne was it island then, ne was it pays'd Amid the ocean waves, but was all desolate. Spenser.

ing a cornucopia of ripe peaches, pears, and pomegranates. Peacham.

The sunny wall
Presents the downy peach. Thomson.

To PEACH. v. n. [corrupted from impeach.]
To accuse of some crime.

If you talk of peaching, I'll peach first, and see whose oath will be believed; I'll trounce you. Dryd.

PEACH-COLOURED. adj. [peach and colour.]
Of a colour like a peach.

One Mr. Caper comes to jail at the suit of Mr.
Threepile the mercer, for some four suits of peach- colour'd fatten, which now peaches him a beggar. Shakspeare.

PEACHICK. n. s. [pea and chick.] The chick of a peacock.

Does the sniveling peachick think to make a cuckold of me? Southern.

PEACOCK. n. s. [papa, Sax. pavo, Latin.

Of this word the etymology is not known:
perhaps it is peak cock, from the tuft of feathers on its head; the peak of women being an ancient ornament: if it be not rather a corruption of beaucoq, Fr. from the more striking lustre of its spangled train.] A fowl eminent for the beauty of his feathers, and particularly of his tail.

Let frantick Talbot triumph for a while;
And, like a peacock, sweep along his tail. Shakspeare.

The birds that are hardest to be drawn, are the tame birds; as cock, turkey-cock and peacock. Peacham.

The peacock, not at thy command, assumes
His glorious train; nor ostrich her rare plumes. Sandys.

The peacock's plumes thy tackle must not fail,
Nor the dear purchase of the fable's tail. Gay.

PEAHEN. n. s. [pea and hen; pava, Latin.]
The female of the peacock.

PEAK. n. s. [peac, Sax. pique; pic, Fr.]

Thy sister seek,
Or on Meander's bank or Latmus' peak. Prior.

2. Any thing acuminated.

3. The rising forepart of a headdress.

To PEAK. v. n. [pequeno, Spanish, little, perhaps lean: but I believe this word has some other derivation: we say a withered man has a sharp face; Falstaff dying, is said to have a nose as sharp as a pen:
from this observation, a sickly man is said to peak or grow acuminated, from pique.]

1. To look sickly.

Weary se'nnights, nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine. Shakspeare.

2. To make a mean figure; to sneak.

I, a dull and muddy mettled rascal, peak,
Like John a dreams, unpregnant of my cause. Shakspeare.

The peaking cornuto her husband, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter. Shakspeare.

PEAL. n. s. [perhaps from pello, pellere
tympana.]

1. A succession of loud sounds: as of bells, thunder, cannon, loud instruments.

They were saluted by the way, with a fair peal of artillery from the tower. Hayward.

The breach of faith cannot be so highly expressed, as in that it shall be the last peal to call the judgments of God upon men. Bacon.

Woods of Oranges will smell into the sea perhaps twenty miles; but what is that, since a peal of ordnance will do as much, which moveth in a small compass? Bacon.

A peal shall rouse their sleep;
Then all thy faints assembled, thou shalt judge
Bad men and angels. Milton.

I myself,
Vanquish'd with a peal of words, O weakness!
Gave up my fort of silence to a woman. Milton.

From the Moors camp the noise grows louder still;

Peals of shouts that rend the heav'ns. Dryden.

Oh! for a peal of thunder that would make Earth, sea, and air, and heaven and Cato tremble!
Addison.

2. It is once used by Shakspeare for a low dull noise, but improperly.

Ere to black Hecat's summons
The shard-born beetle with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Macbeth.

To PEAL. v. n. [from the noun.] To play solemnly and loud.

Let the pealing organ blow,
To the full-voic'd quire below,
In service high and anthems clear,
As may, with sweetness through mine ear,
Dissolve me into extasies,
And bring all heav'n before mine eyes. Milton.

The pealing organ, and the pausing choir;
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd. Tickel.

To PEAL. v. a.

1. To assail with noise.

Nor was his ear less peal'd
With noises loud and ruinous, than when Bellona storms,
With all her batt'ring engines, bent to raze
Some capital city. Milton.

2. To stir with some agitation: as, to peal the pot, is when it boils to stir the liquor therein with a ladle. Ainsworth.

PEARCH-STONE. n. s. [from pearcb and stone.] A sort of stone.

PEARL. n. s. [perle, Fr. perla, Spanish; supposed by Salmasius to come from spherula, Lat.]

1. Pearls, though esteemed of the number of gems by our jewellers, are but a distemper in the creature that produces them: the fish in which pearls are most frequently found is the East Indian berbes or pearl oyster: others are found to produce pearls; as the common oyster, the muscle, and various other kinds; but the Indian pearls are superior to all:
some pearls have been known of the size of a pigeon's egg; as they increase in size, they are less frequent and more valued: the true shape of the pearl is a perfect round; but some of a considerable size are of the shape of a pear, and serve for ear-rings. Hill.

A pearl julep was made of a distilled milk.
Wiseman.

Flow'rs purpled, blue and white,
Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee.
Shakspeare.

Cataracts pearl-coloured, and those of the colour of burnished iron, are esteemed proper to endure the needle. Sharp.

PEASANT. n. f. [paisant, Fr.] A hind; one whose business is rural labour.

He holdeth himself a gentleman, and scorneth to work, which, he saith, is the life of a peasant or churl. Spenser.

I had rather coin my heart, than wring
 From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash. Shakespeare.

The poor peasants in the Alpine countries, diversified themselves in the fields, and after their labour, would be lively and brisk. Brown.

'Tis difficult for us, who are bred up with the same infirmities about us with which we were born, to raise our thoughts and imaginations to those intellectual perfections that attended our nature in the time of innocence, as it is for a peasant bred up in the obscurities of a cottage, to fancy in his mind the unseen splendours of a court. South.

The citizens bring two thousand men, with which they could make head against twelve thousand peasants. Addison.

PEASANTRY. n. f. Peasants; rusticks; country people.

How many then should cover, that stand bare?
 How much low peasantry would then be gleaned
 From the true seed of honour? how much honour Picked from the chaff? Shakespeare.

The peasantry in France, under a much heavier pressure of want and poverty than the day-labourers of England of the reformed religion, understood it much better than those of a higher condition among us. Locke.

PEASCOD. } n. f. [pea, cod and shell.]

PEASHELL. } The husk that contains peas.
 Thou art a sheal'd peascod. Shakespeare.

PEAT. n. f. [petit, French.] A little fondling; a darling; a dear plaything.
 It is now commonly called pet.

A pretty peat! it is best put finger in the eye,
 An she knew why. Shakespeare.

A citizen and his wife
 Both riding on one horse, upon the way
 I overtook; the wench a pretty peat. Donne.

PEBBLE. } n. f. [pæbly tana, PEBBLESTONE. } Saxon.] A stone distinct from flints, being not in layers, but in one homogeneous mass, though sometimes of many colours. Popularly a small stone.

P E C

Through the midst of it ran a sweet brook, which did both hold the eye open with her azure streams, and yet seek to close the eye with the purling noise it made upon the pebble-stones it ran over. Sidney.

The bishop and the duke of Glo'ster's men,
 Forbidden late to carry any weapon,
 Have fill'd their pockets full of pebblestones. Shaksf.
 Suddenly a file of boys delivered such a shower of pebbles loose shot, that I was fain to draw mine honour in. Shakspeare.

Strow'd bibulous above I see the sands,
 The pebbly gravel next. Thomson.

PECCABILITY. n. f. [from peccable.] State of being subject to sin.

Where the common peccability of mankind is urged to induce commiseration towards the offenders; if this be of force in sin, where the concurrence of the will renders the person more inexcusable, it will surely hold much more in bare error which is purely involuntary. Decay of Piety.

PECCABLE. adj. [from pecco, Latin.] Liable to sin.

PECCADILLO. n. f. [Spanish; peccadille, Fr.] A petty fault; a slight crime; a venial offence.

He means those little vices, which we call follies and the defects of the human understanding, or at most the peccadillos of life, rather than the tragical vices to which men are hurried by their unruly passions. Dryden.

'Tis low ebb with his accusers, when such peccadillos as these are put in to swell the charge. Atterb.

PECCANCY. n. f. [from peccant.] Bad quality.

Apply refrigerants without any preceding evacuation, because the disease took its original merely from the disaffection of the part, and not from the peccancy of the humours. Wiseman.

PECCANT. adj. [peccant, Fr. peccans, Lat.]

1. Guilty; criminal.

From them I will not hide
 My judgments, how with mankind I proceed;
 As how with peccant angels late they saw. Milton.

That such a peccant creature should disapprove and repent of every violation of the rules of just and honest, this right reason could not but infer. South.

2. Ill disposed; corrupt; bad; offensive to the body; injurious to health. It is chiefly used in medical writers.

With laxatives preserve your body sound,
 And purge the peccant humours that abound. Dryd.

To his proud pedant, or declin'd a noun. Dryden.

2. A man vain of low knowledge; a man awkwardly ostentatious of his literature.

The pedant can hear nothing but in favour of the conceits he is amorous of. Glanville.

The preface has so much of the pedant, and so little of the conversation of men in it, that I shall pass it over. Addison.

In learning let a nymph delight,
The pedant gets a mistress by't. Swift.

Pursuit of fame with pedants fills our schools,
And into coxcombs burnishes our fools. Young.

PEDANTICAL. } adj. [pedantesque, Fr. from PEDANTICK. } pedant.] Awkwardly ostentatious of learning.

Mr. Cheeke had eloquence in the Latin and Greek tongues; but for other sufficiencies pedantick enough. Hayward.

When we see any thing in an old satyrick that looks forced and pedantick, we ought to consider how it appeared in the time the poet writ. Addison.

The obscurity is brought over them by ignorance and age, made yet more obscure by their pedantical elucidators. Felton.

A spirit of contradiction is so pedantick and hateful, that a man should watch against every instance of it. Watts.

We now believe the Copernican system; yet we shall still use the popular terms of sun-rise and sun-set, and not introduce a new pedantick description of them from the motion of the earth. Bentley.

PEDANTICALLY. adv. [from pedantical.]
With awkward ostentation of literature.

The earl of Roscommon has excellently rendered it; too faithfully is, indeed, pedantically; 'tis a faith like that which proceeds from superstition. Dryden.

PEDANTRY. n. f. [pedanterie, Fr.] Awkward ostentation of needless learning.

'Tis a practice that favours much of pedantry, a reserve of puerility we have not shaken off from school. Brown.

Horace has enticed me into this pedantry of quotation. Cowley.

Make us believe it, if you can: it is in Latin, if I may be allowed the pedantry of a quotation, non persuadebis, etiamsi persuaseris. Addison.

From the universities the young nobility are sent for fear of contracting any airs of pedantry by a college education. Swift.

TO PEDDLE. v. n. To be busy about trifles. Ainsw. It is commonly written piddle: as, what piddling work is here.

PEDIGREE. n. f. [per and degré, Skinner.] Genealogy; lineage; account of descent.

I am no herald to enquire of men's pedigrees, it sufficeth me if I know their virtues. Sidney.

You tell a pedigree
Of threescore and two years, a silly time. Shakspeare.
Alterations of surnames, which in former ages have been very common, have obscured the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little labour to deduce many of them. Camden.

To the old heroes hence was giv'n
A pedigree which reach'd to heav'n. Waller.

The Jews preserved the pedigrees of their several tribes, with a more scrupulous exactness than any other nation. Atterbury.

PEDIMENT. n. f. [pedis, Lat.] In architecture, an ornament that crowns the ordonances, finishes the fronts of buildings, and serves as a decoration over gates, windows, and niches: it is ordinarily of a triangular form, but sometimes makes the arch of a circle. Diſt.

PEDLER. n. f. [a petty dealer; a contraction produced by frequent use.] One who travels the country with small commodities.

All as a poor pedler he did wend,
Bearing a truffle of trifles at his back;
As bells and babies and glasses in his pack. Spenser.

If you did but hear the pedler at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe. Shakspeare.

He is wit's pedler, and retails his wares
At wakes and wassals, meetings, markets, fairs. Shakspeare.

Of Troy brought thee his pedler's pack. Cleaveland.

A narrow education may beget among some of the clergy in possession such contempt for all innovators, as merchants have for pedlers. Swift.

Atlas was so exceeding strong,
He bore the skies upon his back,
Just as a pedler does his pack. Swift.

PEDLERY. adj. [from pedler.] Wares sold by pedlers.

The sufferings of those of my rank are trifles in comparison of what all those are who travel with fish, poultry, pedlery ware to sell. Swift.

To PEEL. v. a. [peler, Fr. from pellis, Lat.]

1. To decorticate; to flay.

The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands,
And stuck them up before the fullsome ewes. Shaksf.

2. [from piller, Fr. to rob.] To plunder.
According to analogy this should be written pill.

Who once just and temp'rate conquer'd well,
But govern ill the nations under yoke,
Peeling their provinces, exhausted all
But lust and rapine. Milton.

Lord-like at ease, with arbitrary pow'r,
To peel the chiefs, the people to devour;
These, traitor, are thy talents. Dryden.

PEEL. n. f. [pellis, Lat. pelure, Fr.] The skin or thin rind of any thing.

PEEL. n. f. [paelle, Fr.] A broad thin board with a long handle, used by bakers to put their bread in and out of the oven.

PEE'LER. n. f. [from peel.]

1. One who strips or flays.

2. A robber; a plunderer.

Yet otes with her sucking a peeler is found,
Both ill to the maister and worse to some ground. Tusser.

As 'tis a peeler of land, sow it upon lands that are rank. Mortimer.

To PEEP. v. n. [This word has no etymology, except that of Skinner, who derives it from opheffen, Dutch, to lift up; and of Casaubon, who derives it from ὀπιπνυσι, a spy; perhaps it may come from pip, pipio, Latin, to cry as young birds: when the chickens first broke the shell and cried, they were said to begin to pip or peep; and the word that expressed the act of crying, was by mistake applied to the act of appearing that was at the same time: this is offered till something better may be found.]

1. To make the first appearance.

She her gay painted plumes disordered,
Seeing at last herself from danger rid,
Peeps forth and soon renews her native pride. Spensf.

Your youth
And the true blood, which peeps forth fairly through it,

Do plainly give you out an unstain'd shepherd. Shaksf.

England and France might through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league,
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakspeare.

I can see his pride

Peep through each part of him. Shakspeare.

The tim'rous maiden-blossoms on each bough

Peep forth from their first blushes; so that now

A thousand ruddy hopes smil'd in each bud,

And flatter'd every greedy eye that stood. Craslow.

With words not hers, and more than human sound,

She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

Earth, but not at once, her visage rears,

And peeps upon the seas from upper grounds. Dryd.

Fair as the face of nature did appear,

When flowers first peep'd, and trees did blossoms bear,

And winter had not yet deform'd th' inverted year. Dryden.

Printing and letters had just peeped abroad in the world; and the restorers of learning wrote very eagerly against one another. Atterbury.

Though but the very white end of the sprout peep out in the outward part of the couch, break it open, you will find the sprout of a greater largeness. Mortimer's Husbandry.

So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
And the first clouds and mountains seem the last;
But those attain'd, we tremble to survey
The growing labours of the lengthen'd way;
Th' increasing prospect tires our wand'ring eyes,
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise. Pope.

PEE

Most souls but peep out once an age,
Dull sullen pris'ners in the body's cage. Pope.

2. To look slyly, closely, or curiously; to look through any crevice.

Who is the same, which at my window peeps. Spenser.

Come thick night!

That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry hold. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time;
Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakspeare.

A fool will peep in at the door. Ecclesiasticus.

The trembling leaves through which he play'd,

Dappling the walk with light and shade,

Like lattice-windows give the spy

Room but to peep with half an eye. Cleaveland.

All doors are shut, no servant peeps abroad,

While others outward went on quick dispatch. Dryd.

The daring flames peep in, and saw from far

The awful beauties of the sacred quire;

But since it was prophan'd by civil war,

Heav'n thought it fit to have it purg'd by fire. Dryden.

From each tree

The feather'd people look down to peep on me. Dryden.

Those remote and vast bodies were formed not merely to be peep'd at through an optick glass. Bentley's Sermons.

O my muse, just distance keep;

Thou art a maid, and must not peep. Prior.

In vain his little children peeping out

Into the mingling storm, demand their sire. Thomf.

PEEP. n. f.

1. First appearance: as, at the peep and first break of day.

2. A sly look.

Would not one think, the almanackmaker was crept out of his grave to take t' other peep at the stars? Swift.

PEEPER. n. f. A young chicken just breaking the shell.

Dishes I chuse, though little, yet genteel;
Snails the first course, and peepers crown the meal. Bramst.

PEEPHOLE. } n. f. [peep and hole.]
PEEPINGHOLE. } Hole through which one may look without being discovered.

The fox spied him through a peepinghole he had found out to see what news. L'Estrange.

By the peephholes in his crest,

Is it not virtually confess,

That there his eyes took distant aim? Prior.

PEER. n. f. [pair, French.]

1. Equal; one of the same rank.

His peers upon this evidence

Have found him guilty of high treason. Shakspeare.

Amongst a man's peers, a man shall be sure of familiarity: and therefore it is good a little to keep state. Bacon.

Oh! what is man, great maker of mankind!

That thou to him so great respect do'st bear!

That thou adorn'st him with so bright a mind,

Mak'st him a king, and ev'n an angel's peer. Davies.

2. One equal in excellence or endowments.

All these did wise Ulysses lead, in counsell peer to Jove. Chapman.

In song he never had his peer,

From sweet Cecilia down to chancicleer. Dryden.

3. Companion; fellow.

He all his peers in beauty did surpass. Spenser.

If you did move to-night,

In the dances, with what spight

Of your peers you were beheld,

That at every motion swell'd. Ben Jonson.

Who bear the bows were knights in Arthur's reign,

Twelve they, and twelve the peers of Charlemagne. Dryden.

4. A nobleman as distinct from a commoner: of nobility we have five degrees, who are all nevertheless called peers, because their essential privileges are the same.

PEE

I see thee compass with thy kingdom's peers,
That speak my salutation in their minds:

Hail king of Scotland! Shakspeare.

King Henry's peers and chief nobility

Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France. Shakspeare.

Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be

A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

To PEER. v. n. [by contraction from appear.]

1. To come just in sight.

As the sun breaks through the darkest clouds,

So honour peereth in the meanest habit. Shakspeare.

Yet many of your horsemen peer,

And gallop o'er the field. Shakspeare.

Ev'n through the hollow eyes of death

I spy life peering. Shakspeare.

See how his gorget peers above his gown,

To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben Jonf.

2. To look narrowly; to peep.

Now for a clod-like hare in form they peer,

Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move,

Now the ambitious lark with mirror clear

They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidney.

Hell itself will pass away,

And leave her dolorous mansion to the peering day. Milton.

Peering in maps for ports, and piers, and roads,

And every object that might make me fear

Misfortune to my ventures. Shakspeare.

PEERAGE. n. f. [pairie, Fr. from peer.]

1. The dignity of a peer.

His friendships he to few confin'd;

No fools of rank or mongrel breed,

Who fain would pass for lords indeed;

Where titles give no right or power,

And peerage is a wither'd flower. Swift.

2. The body of peers.

Not only the penal laws are in force against papists, and their number is contemptible, but also the peerage and commons are excluded from parliament. Dryden.

PEERDOM. n. f. [from peer.] Peerage. Ainsworth.

PEERESS. n. f. [female of peer.] The lady of a peer; a woman ennobled.

Statesman and patriot ply alike the stocks;

Peerefs and butler share alike the box. Pope.

PEERLESS. adj. [from peer.] Unequalled; having no peer.

I bind,

On pain of punishment, the world to weet,

We stand up peerless. Shakspeare.

Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,

Approves her fit for none, but for a king. Shaksf.

Hesperus, that led

The starry host, rode brightest; till the moon,

Rising in cloudy majesty, at length,

Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light. Milton.

Such music worthiest were to blaze

The peerless light of her immortal praise,

Whole lustre leads us. Milton.

Her dress, her shape, her matchless grace,

Were all observ'd, as well as heav'nly face;

With such a peerless majesty she stands,

As in that day she took the crown. Dryden.

PEERLESSNESS. n. f. [from peerless.] Universal superiority.

PEEVISH. adj. [This word Junius, with more reason than he commonly discovers, supposes to be formed by corruption from perverse; Skinner rather derives it from beeish, as we say waspish.]

1. Petulant; waspish; easily offended; irritable; irascible; soon angry; perverse; morose; querulous; full of expressions of discontent; hard to please.

She is peevish, sullen, froward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty. Shaksf.

If thou hast the metal of a king,

Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish town,

Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,

As we will ours, against these saucy walls. Shaksf.

Neither will it be satire or peevish invective to affirm, that infidelity and vice are not much diminished. Swift.

2. Expressing discontent, or fretfulness.

For what can breed more peevish incongruities, Than man to yield to female lamentations? Sidney.

I will not presume To send such peevish tokens to a king. Shakspeare.
Those deserve to be doubly laughed at, that are peevish and angry for nothing to no purpose. L'Estr.
PEEVISHLY. adv. [from peevish.] Angrily; querulously; morosely.

He was so peevishly opinionative and proud, that he would neither ask nor hear the advice of any. Hayward.

PEEVISHNESS. n. f. [from peevish.] Inaccessibility; querulousness; fretfulness; perverseness.

Some miscarriages in government might escape through the peevishness of others; envying the publick should be managed without them. King Ch.
It will be an unpardonable, as well as childish peevishness, if we undervalue the advantages of our knowledge, and neglect to improve it. Locke.

You may find Nothing but acid left behind: From passion you may then be freed, When peevishness and spleen succeed. Swift.

PEG. n. f. [pegge, Teutonic.]

1. A piece of wood driven into a hole, which does the office of an iron nail.

Solid bodies foretnew rain; as boxes and pegs of wood, when they draw and wind hard. Bacon.

The teeth are about thirty in each jaw; all of them claviculares or peg teeth, not much unlike the tusks of a mastiff. Grew.

If he be choleric, we shall treat him like his little friend, and hang him upon a peg till he comes to himself. Addison.

The pegs and nails in a great building, though they are but little valued in themselves, are absolutely necessary to keep the whole frame together. Addison.
A finer petticoat can neither make you richer, more virtuous, or wise, than if it hung upon a peg. Swift.

2. The pins of an instrument in which the strings are strained.

You are well tun'd now; but I'll let down The pegs that make this musick. Shakspeare.

3. To take a PEG lower. To depress; to sink: perhaps from relaxing the cords of musical instruments.

Remember how in arms and politicks, We still have worried all your holy tricks, Trepann'd your party with intrigue, And took your grandees down a peg. Hudibras.

4. The nickname of Margaret.

To PEG. v. a. To fasten with a peg.

I will rend an oak, And peg thee in his knotty entrails, till Thou'lt howl'd away twelve winters. Shakspeare.
Taking the shoots of the past spring, and pegging them down in very rich earth, by that time twelve-month they will be ready to remove. Evelyn.

PELF. n. f. [in low Lat. peltra, not known whence derived; peuffe, in Norman, is frippery.] Money; riches.

The thought of this doth pass all worldly peff. Sidney.

Hardy elf, Thou dar'st view my direful countenance; I read thee rash and heedless of thyself, To trouble my still seat and heaps of precious peff. Spenser.

Of traffick or return she never taketh care; Not provident of peff, as many islands are. Drayton.

Immortal gods, I crave no peff; I pray for no man but myself. Shakspeare.

He call'd his money in; But the prevailing love of peff Soon split him on the former shelf: He put it out again. Dryden's Horace.

To the poor if he refus'd his peff, He us'd them full as kindly as himself. Swift.

PELICAN. n. f. [pelicanus, low Latin; pelican, French.]

There are two sorts of pelicans; one lives upon the water and feeds upon fish; the other keeps in deserts, and feeds upon serpents and other reptiles: the pelican has a peculiar tenderness for its young; it generally places its nest upon a craggy rock: the pelican is supposed to admit its young to suck blood from its breast. Calmet.

Should discarded fathers Have this little mercy on their flesh; 'Twas this flesh begot those pelican daughters. Shakspeare.

The pelican hath a beak broad and flat, like the slice of apothecaries. Hakewill on Providence.

PELLET. n. f. [from pila, Latin; pelote, French.]

Away with her, and pen her up. Shakspeare.

My heavy son

Private in his chamber pens himself. Shakspeare.

The plaister alone would pen the humour already contained in the part, and forbid new humour. Bacon.

Their armour help'd their harm, crush'd in and bruise'd,

Into their substance pent. Milton.

As when a prowling wolf

Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey, Watching where shepherds pen their flocks at eve

In hurdled cotes, amid the field secure, Leaps o'er the fence with ease into the fold. Milton.

The glass, wherein it is penned up, hinders it to deliver itself by an expansion of its parts. Boyle.

The prevention of mischief is prescribed by the Jewish custom; they pen up their daughters, and permit them to be acquainted with none. Harvey.

Ah! that your business had been mine,

To pen the sheep. Dryden.

2. [from the noun; pret. and part. pass. penned.] To write. It probably meant at first only the manual exercise of the pen, or mechanical part of writing; but it has been long used with relation to the style or composition.

For prey these shepherds two he took, Whose metal stiff he knew he could not bend

With hearsey pictures, or a window look,

With one good dance or letter finely penn'd. Sidney.

I would be loath to cast away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well penn'd, I have taken great pains to con it. Shakspeare.

Read this challenge, mark but the *penn*ing of it. Shakspeare.

A sentence spoken by him in English, and penned out of his mouth by four good secretaries, for trial of our orthography, was set down by them. Camden.

He frequented sermons, and penned notes with his own hand. Hayward.

The precepts penned, or preached by the holy apostles, were as divine and as perpetual in respect of obligation. White.

The digesting my thoughts into order, and the setting them down in writing was necessary; for without such strict examination, as the *penn*ing them affords, they would have been disjointed and roving ones. Digby.

Almost condemn'd, he mov'd the judges thus:

Hear, but instead of me, my Oedipus;

The judges hearing with applause, at th' end

Freed him, and said, no fool such lines had penn'd. Denham.

Gentlemen should extempore, or after a little meditation, speak to some subject without *penn*ing of any thing. Locke.

Should I publish the praises that are so well penned, they would do honour to the persons who write them. Addison.

Twenty fools I never saw

Come with petitions fairly penn'd,

Desiring I should stand their friend. Swift.

PENAL. adj. [penal, Fr. from pœna, Lat.]

1. Denouncing punishment; enacting punishment.

Gratitude plants such generosity in the heart of man, as shall more effectually incline him to what is brave and becoming than the terror of any penal law. South.

2. Used for the purposes of punishment; vindictive.

Adamantine chains and penal fire. Milton.

PENALITY. n. f. [penalité, old French.]

Liableness to punishment; condemnation to punishment.

Many of the ancients denied the Antipodes, and some unto the penalty of contrary affirmations; but the experience of navigations can now assert them beyond all dubitation. Brown.

PEN

PENALTY. n. f. [from penalité, old Fr.]

1. Punishment; censure; judicial infliction.

Political power is a right of making laws with penalties of death, and consequently all less penalties, for preserving property, and employing the force of the community in the execution of laws. Locke.

Beneath her footstool, science groans in chains, And wit dreads exile, penalties, and pains. Dunciad.

2. Forfeiture upon non-performance.

Lend this money, not as to thy friend,

But lend it rather to thine enemy,

Who, if he break, thou may'st with better face

Exact the penalty. Shakspeare.

PENANCE. n. f. [penence, old Fr. for penitence.] Infliction either publick or private, suffered as an expression of repentance for sin.

And bitter penance with an iron whip,

Was wont him once to discipline every day. Spenser.

Mew her up,

And make her bear the penance of her tongue. Shak.

No penitentiary, though he had enjoined him never so straight penance to expiate his first offence, would have counselled him to have given over the pursuit of his right. Bacon.

The scourge

Inexorable, and the torturing hour

Calls us to penance. Milton.

A Lorrain surgeon, who whipped the naked part with a great rod of nettles till all over blistered, persuaded him to perform this penance in a sharp fit he had. Temple.

PENCE. n. f. The plural of penny; formed from pennies, by a contraction usual in the rapidity of colloquial speech.

The same servant found one of his fellow-servants, which owed him an hundred pence, and took him by the throat. Matthew.

PENCIL. n. f. [penicillum, Lat.]

1. A small brush of hair which painters dip in their colours.

The Indians will perfectly represent in feathers whatsoever they see drawn with pencils. Heylin.

Smiles to that changed face, that wept before. Dryd.

For thee the groves green liv'ries wear,

For thee the graces lead the dancing hours,

And nature's ready pencil paints the flow'rs. Dryden.

A sort of pictures there is, wherein the colours, as laid by the pencil on the table, mark out very odd figures. Locke.

The faithful pencil has design'd

Some bright idea of the master's mind,

Where a new world leaps out at his command,

And ready nature waits upon his hand. Pope.

2. A black lead pen, with which, cut to a point, they write without ink.

Mark with a pen or pencil the most considerable things in the books you desire to remember. Watts.

3. Any instrument of writing without ink.

To PENCIL. v. n. [from the noun.] To paint.

Painting is almost the natural man;

For since dishonour trafficks with man's nature,

He is but outside: pencil'd figures are

Ev'n such as they give out. Shakspeare.

Pulse of all kinds diffus'd their od'rous pow'rs,

Where nature pencils butterflies on flow'rs. Harte.

PENDANT. n. f. [pendant, Fr.]

1. A jewel hanging in the ear.

The spirits.

Some thrid the mazy ringlets of her hair,

Some hang upon the pendents of her ear. Pope.

2. Any thing hanging by way of ornament.

Unripe fruit, whose verdant stalks do cleave

Clofe to the tree, which grieves no less to leave

The smiling pendant which adorns her so,

And until autumn on the bough should grow. Waller.

3. A pendulum. Obsolete.

To make the same pendant go twice as fast as it did, or make every undulation of it in half the time it did, make the line, at which it hangs, double in geometrical proportion to the line at which it hanged before. Digby.

PEN

4. A small flag in ships.

PENDENCE. n. f. [from pendeo, Latin.]

They brought, by wond'rous art

Pontifical, a ridge of pendent rock

Over the vex'd abyfs. Milton.

PENDING. adj. [pendente lite.] Depending; remaining yet undecided.

A person pending suit with the diocesan, shall be defended in the possession. Ayliffe.

PENDULOSITY. } n. f. [from pendulous.]

PENDULOUSNESS. } The state of hanging; suspension.

His slender legs he encreased by riding, that is, the humours descended upon their pendulosity, having no support or suppedaneous stability. Brown.

PENDULOUS. adj. [pendulus, Latin.]

Hanging; not supported below.

All the plagues, that in the pendulous air

Hang fated o'er men's faults, light on thy daughters. Shakspeare.

Bellerophon's horse, framed of iron, and placed between two loadstones with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Brown.

The grinders are furnished with three roots, and in the upper jaw often four, because these are pendulous. Ray.

PENDULUM. n. f. [pendulus, Lat. pendule, Fr.] Any weight hung so as that it may easily swing backward and forward, of which the great law is, that its oscillations are always performed in equal time.

Upon the bench I will so handle 'em,

That the vibration of this pendulum

Shall make all taylor's yards of one

Unanimous opinion. Hudibras.

PENETRABILITY. n. f. [from penetrable.]

Susceptibility of impression from another body.

There being no mean between penetrability and impenetrability, passivity and activity, they being contrary; therefore the infinite rarefaction of the one quality is the position of its contrary. Cbeyne.

PENETRABLE. adj. [penetrable, Fr. penetrabilis, Lat.]

1. Such as may be pierced; such as may admit the entrance of another body.

Let him try thy dart,

And pierce his only penetrable part. Dryden.

2. Susceptive of moral or intellectual impression.

I am not made of stone,

But penetrable to your kind entreaties. Shakspeare.

Peace,

And let me wring your heart, for so I shall,

If it be made of penetrable stuff. Shakspeare.

PENETRAIL. n. f. [penetralia, Lat.] Interior parts. Not in use.

The heart resists purulent fumes, into whose penetrails to insinuate some time must be allowed.

Harvey.

PENETRANCY. n. f. [from penetrant.] Power of entering or piercing.

The subtilty, activity and penetrancy of its effluvia no obstacle can stop or repel, but they will make their way through all bodies.

Ray.

PENETRANT. adj. [penetrant, French.]

Having the power to pierce or enter; sharp; subtle.

If the operation of these salts be in convenient glasses promoted by warmth, the ascending steams may easily be caught and reduced into a penetrant spirit.

Boyle.

The food mingled with some dissolvent juices, is evacuated into the intestines, where it is further subtilized and rendered so fluid and penetrant, that the finer part finds its way in at the streight orifices of the lacteous veins.

Ray.

TO PENETRATE. v. a. [penetro, Latin; penetrer, Fr.]

There shall we clearly see the uses of these things, which here were too subtle for us to penetrate.

Ray.

TO PENETRATE. v. n.

1. To make way.

Court virtues bear, like gems, the highest rate, Born where heav'n's influence scarce can penetrate: Though the same sun with all diffusive rays Smile in the rose, and in the diamond blaze, We praise the stronger effort of his pow'r, And always set the gem above the flow'r.

Pope.

2. To make way by the mind.

If we reached no farther than metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing.

Locke.

PENETRATION. n. f. [penetration, Fr. from penetrate.]

1. The act of entering into any body.

It warms

The universe, and to each inward part With gentle penetration though unseen Shouts invisible virtue even to the deep.

Milton.

2. Mental entrance into any thing abstruse.

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, is not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions.

Watts.

3. Acuteness; sagacity.

The proudest admirer of his own parts might consult with others, though of inferior capacity and penetration.

Watts.

PENETRATIVE. adj. [from penetrate.]

1. Piercing; sharp; subtle.

Thy master thus with pleacht arms, bending down His corrigible neck, his face subdu'd To penetrative shame.

Shakspeare.

PENETRATIVENESS. n. f. [from penetrative.] The quality of being penetrative.

PENGUIN. n. f. [anser magellanicus, Lat.]

1. A bird. This bird was found with this name, as is supposed, by the first discoverers of America; and penguin signifying in Welsh a white head, and the head of this fowl being white, it has been imagined that America was peopled from Wales; whence Hudibras:

British Indians nam'd from penguins.

Grew gives another account of the name, deriving it from pinguis, Latin, fat; but is, I believe, mistaken.

The penguin is so called from his extraordinary fatness: for though he be no higher than a large goose, yet he weighs sometimes sixteen pounds; his wings are extreme short and little, altogether unuseful for flight, but by the help whereof he swims very swiftly.

Grew.

2. A fruit.

The penguin is very common in the West Indies, where the juice of its fruit is often put into punch, being of a sharp acid flavour: there is also a wine made of the juice of this fruit, but it will not keep good long.

Miller.

PENINSULA. n. f. [Latin, pene insula; peninsule, Fr.] A piece of land almost surrounded by the sea, but joined by a narrow neck to the main.

PENITENCE. n. f. [penitence, Fr. pœnitentia, Lat.] Repentance; sorrow for crimes; contrition for sin, with amendments of life or change of the affections.

Death is deferr'd, and penitence has room

To mitigate, if not reverse the doom.

Dryden.

PENITENT. adj. [penitent, Fr. pœnitens, Lat.] Repentant; contrite for sin; sorrowful for past transgressions, and resolutely amending life.

Much it joys me

To see you become so penitent.

Shakspeare.

Nor in the land of their captivity

Humbled themselves, or penitent besought

The God of their forefathers.

Milton.

Provoking God to raise them enemies;

From whom as oft he saves them penitent.

Milton.

The proud he tam'd, the penitent he chear'd,

Nor to rebuke the rich offender fear'd;

His preaching much, but more his practice wrought,

A living sermon of the truths he taught.

Dryden.

PENITENT. n. f.

1. One sorrowful for sin.

Concealed treasures shall be brought into use by the industry of converted penitents, whose carcases the impartial laws shall dedicate to the worms of the earth.

Bacon.

The repentance, which is formed by a grateful sense of the divine goodness towards him, is resolved on while all the appetites are in their strength: the penitent conquers the temptations of sin in their full force.

Rogers.

2. One under censures of the church, but admitted to penance.

The counterfeit Dionysius describes the practice of the church, that the catechumens and penitents were admitted to the lessons and psalms, and then excluded.

Stillingfleet.

3. One under the direction of a confessor.

PENITENTIAL. adj. [from penitence.] Expressing penitence; enjoined as penance.

I have done penance for contemning love, Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me With bitter fasts and penitential groans.

Shakspeare.

Is it not strange, that a rational man should adore leeks and garlick, and shed penitential tears at the smell of a deified onion?

South.

PENITENTIAL. n. f. [penitenciel, Fr. pœnitentiale, low Lat.] A book directing the degrees of penance.

The penitentials or book of penance contained such matters as related to the imposing of penance, and the reconciliation of the person that suffered penance.

Ayliffe.

PENITENTIARY. n. f. [penitencier, Fr. pœnitentiarius, low Lat.]

1. One who prescribes the rules and measures of penance.

Upon the loss of Urbin, the duke's undoubted right, no penitentiary, though he had enjoined him never so straight penance to expiate his first offence, would have counselled him to have given over pursuit of his right, which he prosperously re-obtained.

Bacon.

The great penitentiary with his counsellors prescribes the measure of penance.

Ayliffe.

2. A penitent; one who does penance.

No silver penny to reward her pain. Dryden.

One frugal on his birth-day fears to dine,
Does at a penny's cost in herbs repine. Dryden.

2. Proverbially. A small sum.

You shall hear
The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not fearing Britain, than have tidings
Of any penny tribute paid. Shakspeare.

We will not lend thee a penny. Shakspeare.
Because there is a latitude of gain in buying and selling, take not the utmost penny that is lawful, for although it be lawful, yet it is not safe. Taylor.

3. Money in general.

Pepper and Sabeen incense take;
And with post-haste thy running markets make;
Be sure to turn the penny. Dryden.

It may be a contrivance of some printer, who hath a mind to make a penny. Swift.

PENNYROYAL, or pudding grass, n. s. [pulegium, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

PEN'TECOST, n. s. [πεντήκοστή; pentecoste, Fr.]

1. A feast among the Jews.

Pentecost signifies the fiftieth, because this feast was celebrated the fiftieth day after the sixteenth of Nisan, which was the second day of the feast of the passover: the Hebrews call it the feast of weeks, because it was kept seven weeks after the passover: they then offered the first fruits of the wheat harvest, which then was completed: it was instituted to oblige the Israelites to repair to the temple, there to acknowledge the Lord's dominion, and also to render thanks to God for the law he had given them from mount Sinai, on the fiftieth day after their coming out of Egypt. Calmet.

2. Whitsuntide.

'Tis since the nuptial of Lucentio,
Come pentecost as quickly as it will,
Some five and twenty years. Shakspeare.

PENTECOSTAL, adj. [from pentecost.] Belonging to Whitsuntide.

I have composed sundry collects, made up out of the church collects, with some little variations as the collects adventual, quadragesimal, paschal or pentecostal. Sanderson.

PEN'THOUSE, n. s. [pent, from pente, Fr. and house.] A shed hanging out aslope from the main wall.

PEO

This is the penthouse under which Lorenzo desired us to make a stand. Shakspeare.
Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid. Shakspeare.
The Turks lurking under their penitence, laboured with mattocks to dig up the foundation of the wall. Knolles.

Those defensive engines, made by the Romans into the form of penthouses, to cover the assailants from the weapons of the besieged, would he presently batter in pieces with stones and blocks. Wilkins.

My penthouse eye-brows and my shaggy beard
Offend your sight; but these are manly signs. Dryden.

The chill rain
Drops from some penthouse on her wretched head. Rowe.

PENTICE n. f. [appetit, Fr. pendice, Italian. It is commonly supposed a corruption of penthouse; but perhaps pentice is the true word.] A sloping roof.

Climbs that fear the falling and lying of much snow, ought to provide more inclining pentices. Wotton.

PENTILE n. f. [pent and tile.] A tile formed to cover the sloping part of the roof: they are often called pantiles.

Pentiles are thirteen inches long, with a button to hang on the laths; they are hollow and circular. Mason.

PENT up part. adj. [pent, from pen and up.] Shut up.

Close pent up guilts,
Rive your concealing continents. Shakspeare.

PENULTIMATE adj. [penultimus, Lat.]
Last but one.

PENUMBRA n. f. [pene and umbra, Lat.]
An imperfect shadow; that part of the shadow which is half light.

The breadth of this image answered to the sun's diameter, and was about two inches and the eighth part of an inch, including the penumbra. Newton.

PENURIOUS adj. [from penuria, Lat.]

1. Niggardly; sparingly; not liberal;
fardly mean.

What more can our penurious reason grant
To the large whale or castled elephant? Prior.

2. Scant; not plentiful.

Some penurious spring by chance appear'd
Scanty of water. Addison.

PENURIOUSLY adv. [from penurious.]
Sparingly; not plentifully.

PENURIOUSNESS n. f. [from penurious.]

1. Niggardliness; parsimony.

If we consider the infinite industry and penuriousness of that people, it is no wonder that, notwithstanding they furnish as great taxes as their neighbours, they make a better figure. Addison.

2. Scantiness; not plenty.

PENURY n. f. [penuria, Lat.] Poverty;
indigence.

The penury of the ecclesiastical estate. Hooker.

Who can perfectly declare
The wondrous cradle of thy infancy?

When thy great mother Venus first thee bare,
Begot of plenty and of penury. Spenser.

Sometimes am I king;
Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar;

And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me, I was better when a king;

Then I am king'd again. Shakspeare.

All innocent they were exposed to hardship and penury, which, without you, they could never have escaped. Spratt.

Let them not still be obstinately blind,
Still to divert the good design'd,

Or with malignant penury
To starve the royal virtues of his mind. Dryden.

May they not justly to our climes upbraid
Shortness of night, and penury of shade? Prior.

PE'ONY n. f. [pæonia, Lat.] A flower.

A physician had often tried the peony root unsea-
Vol. II,

PEP

sonably gathered without success; but having gathered it when the decreasing moon passes under Aries, and tied the slit root about the necks of his patients, he had freed more than one from epileptical fits. Boyle.

PE'OPLE n. f. [peuple, Fr. populus, Lat.]

1. A nation; those who compose a community. In this sense is read peoples.

Prophecy again before many peoples and nations and tongues. Revelations.

Ants are a people not strong, yet they prepare their meat in summer. Proverbs.

What is the city but the people?
True, the people are the city. Shakspeare.

2. The vulgar.

I must like beasts or common people dye,
Unless you write my elegy. Cowley.

The knowing artist may Judge better than the people, but a play
Made for delight,

If you approve it not, has no excuse. Waller.

3. The commonalty; not the princes or nobles.

Of late
When corn was given gratis, you repin'd,
Scandal'd the suplicants; for the people call'd them
Time-pleasers, flatterers. Shakspeare.

Myself shall mount the rostrum in his favour,
And strive to gain his pardon from the people. Addison.

4. Persons of a particular class.

If a man temper his actions to content every combination of people, the musick will be the fuller. Bacon.

A small red flower in the stubble fields country people call the wincope. Bacon.

5. Men, or persons in general. In this sense, the word people is used indefinitely, like on in French.

The frogs petitioning for a king, bids people have a care of struggling with heaven. L'Estrange.

People were tempted to lend by great premiums
and large interest. Swift.

Watery liquor will keep an animal from starving by diluting the fluids; for people have lived twenty-four days upon nothing but water. Arbuthnot.

People in adversity should preserve laudable customs. Clarissa.

TO PE'OPLE v. a. [peupler, Fr.] To stock with inhabitants.

Suppose that Brute, or whosoever else that first peopled this island, had arrived upon Thames, and called the island after his name Britannia. Raleigh.

He would not be alone, who all things can;
But peopled heav'n with angels, earth with man. Dryden.

Beauty a monarch is
Which kingly power magnificently proves

By crowds of slaves, and peopled empire loves. Dryd.

A peopled city made a desert place. Dryden.

Imperious death directs his ebon lance;
Peoples great Henry's tombs, and leads up Holben's dance. Prior.

PEPA'STICKS n. f. [παραίστω.] Medicines which are good to help the rawness of the stomach and digest crudities. Dict.

PE'PPER n. f. [piper, Lat. poivre, Fr.]

We have three kinds of pepper; the black, the white, and the long, which are three different fruits produced by three distinct plants: black pepper is a dried fruit of the size of a vetch and roundish, but rather of a deep brown than a black colour: with this we are supplied from Java, Malabar, and Sumatra, and the plant has the same heat and fiery taste that we find in the pepper: white pepper is commonly factitious, and prepared from the black by taking off the outer bark; but there is a rarer fort, which is a genuine fruit naturally white: long pepper is a fruit gathered while unripe and dried, of an inch or an inch and half in length, and of the thickness of a large goose quill. Hill.

Scatter o'er the blooms the pungent dust
Of pepper, fatal to the frosty tribe. Thomson.

TO PE'PPER v. a. [from the noun.]

sharp; very violent.

Malign, continual peracute fevers, after most dangerous attacks, suddenly remit of the ardent heat. Harvey.

PERADVENTURE adv. [par aventure,
French.]

1. Perhaps; may be; by chance.

That wherein they might not be like unto either, was such peradventure as had been no whit less unlawful. Hooker.

As you return, visit my house; let our old acquaintance be renew'd; peradventure I will with you to court. Shakspeare.

What peradventure may appear very full to me,
may appear very crude and maimed to a stranger. Digby.

2. Doubt; question. It is sometimes used as a noun, but not gracefully nor properly.

Though men's persons ought not to be hated, yet without all peradventure their practices justly may. South.

TO PERA'GRATE v. a. [peragro, Lat.]
To wander over; to ramble through. Dict.

PERAGRA'TION n. f. [from peragrate.]
The act of passing through any state or space.

A month of peragation is the time of the moon's revolution from any part of the zodiack unto the same again, and this containeth but twenty-seven days and eight hours. Brown.

The moon has two accounts which are her months or years of revolution; one her periodick month, or month of peragation, which chiefly respects her own proper motion or place in the zodiack, by which she like the sun performs her revolution round the zodiack from any one point to the same again. Holder.

TO PERA'MBULATE v. a. [perambulo,
Latin.]

1. To walk through.

Persons the lord deputy should nominate to view and perambulate Irish territories, and thereupon to divide and limit the same. Davies.

No sound is produced but with a perceptible blast of the air, and with some resistance of the air Brucken.

When I think, remember, or abstract; these intrinsic operations of my mind are not perceptible by my sight, hearing, taste, smell, or feeling. Hale.

It perceives them immediately, as being immediately objected to and perceptible to the sense; as I perceive the sun by my sight. Hale.

In the anatomy of the mind, as of the body, more good will accrue to mankind by attending to the large, open, and perceptible parts, than by studying too much finer nerves. Pope.

PERCEPTIBLY. adv. [from perceptible.] In such a manner as may be perceived.

The woman decays perceptibly every week. Pope.

PERCEPTION. n. f. [perception, Fr. perceptio, Latin.]

1. The power of perceiving; knowledge; consciousness.

Matter hath no life nor perception, and is not conscious of its own existence. Bentley.

Perception is that act of the mind, or rather a passion or impression, whereby the mind becomes conscious of any thing; as when I feel hunger, thirst, cold, or heat. Watts.

2. The act of perceiving; observation.

3. Notion; idea.

By the inventors, and their followers that would seem not to come too short of the perceptions of the leaders, they are magnified. Hale.

4. The state of being affected by something.

Great mountains have a perception of the disposition of the air to tempests sooner than the vallies below; and therefore they say in Wales, when certain hills have their night caps on, they mean mischief. Bacon.

This experiment discovereth perception in plants to move towards that which should comfort them, though at a distance. Bacon.

PERCEPTIVE. adj. [perceptus, Latin.] Having the power of perceiving.

There is a difficulty that pincheth: the soul is awake and solicited by external motions, for some of them reach the perceptive region in the most silent repose and obscurity of night: what is it then that prevents our sensations? Glanville.

Whatever the least real point of the essence of the perceptive part of the soul does perceive, every real point of the perceptive must perceive at once. More.

PERCEPTIVITY. n. f. [from perceptive.] The power of perception or thinking.

Locke.

PERCH. n. f. [perca, Lat. perche, Fr.] A fish of prey, that like the pike and trout, carries his teeth in his mouth: he dare venture to kill and destroy several other kinds of fish: he has a hooked or hog back, which is armed with stiff bristles, and all his skin armed with thick hard scales, and hath two fins on his back: he spawns but once a year, and is held very nutritive. Walton.

PERCH. n. f. [pertica, Lat. perche, Fr.]

1. A measure of five yards and a half; a pole.

He perbeth on some branch thereby,
To weather him and his moist wings to dry. Spenser.

The world is grown so bad,
That wrens make prey, where eagles dare not perch. Shakspere.

The morning muses perch like birds, and sing
Among his branches. Craspaw.

Let owls keep close within the tree, and not perch upon the upper boughs. South.

They wing'd their flight aloft, then stooping low,
Perch'd on the double tree, that bears the golden bough. Dryden.

Glory, like the dazzling eagle, stood Perch'd on my bever in the Granic flood;
When fortune's self my standard trembling bore,
And the pale fates stood frighted on the shore. Lee.

Hosfs of birds that wing the liquid air,
Perch'd in the boughs, had nightly lodging there. Dryden.

To PERCH. v. a. To place on a perch.

It would be notoriously perceptible, if you could perch yourself as a bird on the top of some high steeple. More.

PERCOLATION. n. f. [from percolate.] The act of straining; purification or separation by straining.

Experiments touching the straining and passing of bodies one through another, they call percolation. Bacon.

Water passing through the veins of the ear is rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ra.

To PERCUSS. v. a. [percussus, Lat.] To strike.

Flame percussed by air giveth a noise; as in blowing of the fire by bellows; and so likewise flame percussing the air strongly. Bacon.

PERCUSSION. n. f. [percussio, Lat. percussion, French.]

1. The act of striking; stroke.

With thy grim looks, and
The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds,
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake. Shakspere.

The percussion of the greater quantity of air produced by the greatness of the body percussing. Bacon.

Some note, that the times when the stroke or cussion of an envious eye doth most hurt are, when the party envied is beheld in glory.

The vibrations or tremors excited in the air by percussion, continue a little time to move from place of percussion in concentric spheres to distances. New.

Marbles taught him percussion and the law of motion, and tops the centrifugal motion. Arbut.

2. Effect of sound in the ear.

In double rhymes the percussion is stronger. R.

PERCU'TIENT. n. f. [percutiens, Lat.] Striking; having the power to strike.

Inequality of sounds is accidental, either from roughness or obliquity of the passage, or from doubling of the percipient. I.

PERDITION. n. f. [perditio, Lat. perdition, French.]

1. Destruction; ruin; death.

Upon tidings now arrived, importing the perdition of the Turkish fleet, every man put himself in triumph. Shakspere.

We took ourselves for free men, seeing the no danger of our utter perdition, and lived m fully; going abroad, and seeing what was to be seen. Bacon.

 Quick let us part! Perdition's in thy presence,
 And horror dwells about thee! Addison.

2. Loss.
 There's no soul lost,
 Nay not so much perdition as an hair
 Betid to any creature in the vessel
 Thou saw'st sink. Shakspeare.

3. Eternal death.
 As life and death, mercy and wrath, are matters of knowledge, all men's salvation and some men's endless perdition are things so opposite, that whoever doth affirm the one, must necessarily deny the other.
Hooker.
 Men once fallen away from undoubted truth, do after wander for ever more in vices unknown, and daily travel towards their eternal perdition. Raleigh.

PERDUE. adv. [This word, which among us is adverbially taken, comes from the French perdue, or forlorn hope: as, perdue or advanced sentinel.] Close; in ambush.
 Few minutes he had lain perdue,
 To guard his desp'rate avenue. Hudibras.

PERDULOUS, adj. [from perdo, Lat.] Lost; thrown away.
 There may be some wandering perdulous wishes of known impossibilities; as a man who hath committed an offence, may wish he had not committed it: but to chuse efficaciously and impossibility, is as impossible as an impossibility. Bramhall.

PERDURABLE. adj. [perdurable, Fr. perdure, Lat.] Lasting; long continued.
 Not in use, nor accented according to analogy.
 Confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness. Shakspeare.

 should give of his peregrination abroad. Bacon.
 It is not amiss to observe the heads of doctrine, which the apostles agreed to publish in all their peregrinations. Hammond.
 That we do not contend to have the earth pass for a paradise, we reckon it only as the land of our peregrination, and aspire after a better country.
Bentley.

PEREGRINE. adj. [peregrin, old French; peregrinus, Latin.] Foreign; not native;
 not domestick.
 The received opinion, that putrefaction is caused by cold or peregrine and preternatural heat, is but a notion. Bacon.

TO PEREMPT. v. a. [peremptus, Lat.] To kill; to crush. A law term.
 Nor is it any objection, that the cause of appeal is perempted by the desertion of an appeal; because the office of the judge continues after such instance is perempted. Ayliffe.

PEREMPTION. n. s. [peremptio, Lat. peremptio, Fr.] Crush; extinction. Law term.
 This peremption of instance was introduced in favour of the publick, lest suits should be rendered perpetual. Ayliffe.

PEREMPTORILY. adv. [from peremptory.]

 all further debate.
 Norfolk denies them peremptorily. Daniel.
 Not to speak peremptorily or conclusively, touching the point of possibility, till they have heard me deduce the means of the execution. Bacon.
 Some organs are so peremptorily necessary, that the extinguishment of the spirits doth speedily follow, but yet so as there is an interim. Bacon.
 In all conferences it was insisted peremptorily, that the king must yield to what power was required.
Clarendon.
 God's laws peremptorily injoin us, and the things therein implied do straitly oblige us to partake of the holy sacrament. Kettlewell.
 Some talk of letters before the deluge; but that is a matter of mere conjecture, and nothing can be peremptorily determined either the one way or the other. Woodward.
 Never judge peremprarily on first appearances.
Clarissa.

PEREMPTORINESS. n. s. [from peremp-tory.] Positiveness; absolute decision;
 dogmatism.
Peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magis-terialness in matters of opinion; the other a posi-tiveness in relating matters of fact. Gov. of the Ton.
 Self-conceit and peremptoriness in a man's own opinion are not commonly reputed vices. Tillotson.

PEREMPTORY. adj. [peremptorius, low
 Lat. peremptore, Fr. from peremptus, killed.] Dogmatical; absolute; such as destroys all further expostulation.
 If I entertaine
 As peremptorie a desire, to levell with the plaine
 A citie, where they loved to live; stand not betwixt my ire
 And what it aims at. Chapman.
 As touching the apostle, wherein he was so resolute and peremptory, our Lord Jesus Christ made manifest unto him, even by intuitive revelation, wherein there was no possibility of errour. Hooker.
 He may have fifty-six exceptions peremptorily against the jurors, of which he shall shew no cause.
Spenser.
 To-morrow be in readiness to go;
 Excuse it not, for I am peremptory. Shakspeare.
 Not death himself
 In mortal fury is half so peremptory,
 As we to keep this city. Shakspeare.
 Though the text and the doctrine run peremptory and absolute, whosoever denies Christ, shall as-surely be denied by him; yet still there is a tacit condition, unless repentance intervene. South.
 The more modest confests, that learning was to give us a fuller discovery of our ignorance, and to keep us from being peremptory and dogmatical in our determinations. Collier.
 He would never talk in such a peremptory and discouraging manner, were he not assured that he was able to subdue the most powerful opposition against the doctrine which he taught. Addison.

PERENNIAL. adj. [perennis, Latin.]
 1. Lasting through the year.
 If the quantity were precisely the same in these perennial fountains, the difficulty would be greater.
Cheyne.
 2. Perpetual; unceasing.
 The matter wherewith these perennial clouds are raised, is the sea that surrounds them. Harvey.

PERENNITY. n. s. [from perennitas, Lat.]
 Equality of lasting through all seasons;
 perpetuity.
 That springs have their origin from the sea, and not from rains and vapours, I conclude from the perennity of divers springs. Derham.

PERFECT. adj. [perfectus, Lat. parfait,
 French.]
 1. Complete; consummate; finished; neither defective nor redundant.
 We count those things perfect, which want nothing requisite for the end whereto they were instituted.
Hooker.
 Anon they move
 In perfect phalanx. Milton.

Uriel, no wonder if thy perfect light
 See far and wide. Milton.
 Whoever thinks a perfect work to see,
 Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er shall be.
Pope.
 As full as perfect in a hair, as heart. Pope.

2. Fully informed; fully skilful.
 Within a ken our army lies;
 Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
 Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;
 Then reason wills our hearts should be as good.
Shakspeare.
 Fair dame! I am not to you known,
 Though in your state of honour I am perfect. Shaks.
 I do not take myself to be so perfect in the privileges of Bohemia, as to handle that part; and will not offer at that I cannot matter. Bacon.

3. Pure; blameless; clear; immaculate.
 This is a sense chiefly theological.
 My parts, my title, and my perfect soul
 Shall manifest me rightly. Shakspeare.
 Thou shalt be perfect with the Lord thy God.
Deuteronomy.

4. Confident; certain.
 Thou art perfect then, our ship hath touch'd upon
 The deserts of Bohemia. Shakspeare.

TO PERFECT. v. a. [perfectus, from perficio, Latin; parfaire, French.]
 1. To finish; to complete; to consum-mate; to bring to its due state.
 If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us. 1 John.
 Beauty now must perfect my renown;
 With that I govern'd him that rules this isle. Wall.
 In substances rest not in the ordinary complex idea commonly received, but enquire into the nature and properties of the things themselves, and thereby perfect our ideas of their distinct species. Locke.
 Endeavour not to settle too many habits at once, lest by variety you confound them, and so perfect
 none. Locke.
 What toil did honest Curio take
 To get one medal wanting yet,
 And perfect all his Roman set? Prior.

2. To make skilful; to instruct fully.
 Her cause and yours
 I'll perfect him withal, and he shall bring you Before the duke. Shakspeare.

PERFECTER. n. s. [from perfect.] One that makes perfect.
 This practice was altered; they offered not to Mercury, but to Jupiter the perfecter. Broom.

PERFECTION. n. s. [perfectio, Lat. perfection, French.]
 1. The state of being perfect.
 Man doth seek a triple perfection; first a sensual, consisting in those things which very life itself requireth, either as necessary supplements or as ornaments thereof; then an intellectual, consisting in those things which none underneath man is capable of; lastly, a spiritual and divine, consisting in those things whereunto we tend by supernatural means here, but cannot here attain. Hooker.
 It is a judgment main'd and most imperfect,
 That will confests perfection so could err
 Against all rules of nature. Shakspeare.
 True virtue being united to the heavenly grace of faith makes up the highest perfection. Milton.
 No human understanding being absolutely secured from mistake by the perfection of its own nature, it follows that no man can be infallible but by supernatural assistance. Tillotson.
 Many things impossible to thought,
 Have been by need to full perfection brought. Dryd.
 Too few, or of an improper figure and dimation to do their duty in perfection. Blackmore.
 The question is not, whether gospel perfection can be fully attained; but whether you come as near it as a sincere intention, and careful diligence can carry you. Law.

2. Something that concurs to produce supreme excellence. In this sense it has a plural.
 What tongue can her perfections tell,
 In whose each part all pens may dwell? Sidney.
 A heroick poem requires, as its last perfection, 2N 2

the accomplishment of some extraordinary undertaking, which requires more of the active virtue than the suffering. Dryden.

3. Attribute of God.

If God be infinitely holy, just, and good, he must take delight in those creatures that resemble him most in these perfections. Atterbury.

4. Exact resemblance.

To PERFECTIONATE. v. a. [perfectionner, Fr. from perfection.] To make perfect; to advance to perfection. A word proposed by Dryden, but not received, nor worthy of reception.

Painters and sculptors, chusing the most elegant natural beauties, perfectionate the idea, and advance their art above nature itself in her individual productions; the utmost mastery of human performance. Dryden.

He has founded an academy for the progress and perfectionating of painting. Dryden.

PERFECTIVE. adj. [from perfect.] Conducing to bring to perfection: with of.

Praise and adoration are actions perfective of our souls. More.

Eternal life shall not consist in endless love; the other faculties shall be employed in actions suitable to, and perfective of their natures. Ray.

PERFECTIVELY. adv. [from perfective.]

In such a manner as brings to perfection.

As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perfectively in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end. Grew.

PERFECTLY. adv. [from perfect.]

1. In the highest degree of excellence.

2. Totally; completely.

Chawing little sponges dipt in oil, when perfectly under water, he could longer support the want of respiration. Boyle.

Words recal to our thoughts those ideas only which they have been wont to be signs of, but cannot introduce any perfectly new and unknown simple ideas. Locke.

3. Exactly; accurately.

We know bodies and their properties most perfectly. Locke.

PERFECTNESS. n. s. [from perfect.]

1. Completeness; consummate excellence; perfection.

2. Goodness; virtue. A scriptural word.

Fr.] Treachery; want of faith; breach of faith.

PERFLABLE. adj. [from perflo, Latin.]

Having the wind driven through.

To PERFLATE. v. a. [perflo, Latin.] To blow through.

If eastern winds did perflate our climates more frequently, they would clarify and refresh our air. Harvey.

The first consideration in building of cities, is to make them open, airy, and well perflated. Arbut.

PERFLATION. n. s. [from perflate.] The act of blowing through.

Miners, by perflations with large bellows, give motion to the air, which ventilates and cools the mines. Woodward.

To PERFORATE. v. a. [perforo, Lat.]

To pierce with a tool; to bore.

Draw the bough of a low fruit tree newly budded without twisting, into an earthen pot perforate at the bottom, and then cover the pot with earth, it will yield a very large fruit. Bacon.

A perforated bladder does not swell. Boyle.

The labour'd chyle pervades the pores, In all the arterial perforated shores. Blackmore.

The aperture was limited by an opaque circle placed between the eye-glass and the eye, and perforated in the middle with a little round hole for the rays to pass through to the eye. Newton.

Worms perforate the guts. Arbutnot.

PERFORATION. n. s. [from perforate.]

1. The act of piercing or boring.

The likeliest way is the perforation of the body of the tree in several places one above another, and the filling of the holes. Bacon.

The industrious perforation of the tendons of the second joints of fingers and toes, and the drawing the tendons of the third joints through them. More.

2. Hole; place bored.

That the nipples should be made spongy, and with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk, are arguments of providence. Ray.

PERFORATOR. n. s. [from perforate.] The instrument of boring.

The patient placed in a convenient chair, dipping the trocar in oil, stab it suddenly through the teguments, and withdrawing the perforator, leave the waters to empty by the canula. Sharp.

PERFORCE. adv. [per and force.] By violence; violently.

Guyon to him leaping, staid His hand; that trembled as one terrify'd; And though himself were at the sight dismay'd, Yet him perforce restrain'd. Spenser.

Jealous Oberon would have the child, But the perforce withholds the loved boy. Shakspeare.

She amaz'd, her cheeks All trembling and arising, full of spots, And pale with death at hand, perforce she breaks Into the inmost rooms. Peacham on Poetry.

To PERFORM. v. a. [performare, Italian.]

To execute; to do; to discharge; to achieve an undertaking; to accomplish.

All three set among the foremost ranks of fame for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt. Sidney.

Hast thou, spirit, Perform'd to point the tempest that I had thee? Shakspeare.

What cannot you and I perform upon Th' unguarded Duncan? Shakspeare.

I will cry unto God that performeth all things for me. Psalms.

Let all things be performed after the law of God diligently. 1 Esdras.

Thou, my love, Perform his fun'ral with paternal care. Dryden.

You perform her office in the sphere, Born of her blood, and make a new Platonick year. Dryden.

He effectually performed his part, with great integrity, learning, and acuteness; with the exactness of a scholar, and the judgment of a complete divine. Waterland.

To PERFORM. v. n. To succeed in an attempt.

When a poet has performed admirably in several illustrious places, we sometimes also admire his very errors. Watts.

PERFORMABLE. adj. [from perform.] Practicable; such as may be done.

Men forget the relations of history, affirming that elephants have no joints, whereas their actions are not performable without them. Brown.

PERFORMANCE. n. s. [from perform.]

1. Completion of something designed; execution of something promised.

His promises were, as he then was, mighty; But his performance, as he now is, nothing. Shakspeare.

Promising is the very air o' th' time; it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act, and but in the plainer kind of people, the deed is quite out of use. Shakspeare.

Perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance. 2 Corinthians.

The only means to make him successful in the performance of these great works, was to be above contempt. South.

Men may, and must differ in their employments; but yet they must all act for the same ends, as dutiful servants of God, in the right and pious performance of their several callings. Lewis.

2. Composition; work.

In the good poems of other men, I can only be sure, that 'tis the hand of a good master; but in your performances 'tis scarcely possible for me to be deceived. Dryden.

Few of our comic performances give good examples. Clavissa.

3. Action; something done.

In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what have you heard her say? Shakspeare.

PERFORMER. n. s. [from perform.]

1. One that performs any thing.

The merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer. Shakspeare.

PERFUMATORY. adj. [from perfume.]

That which perfumes.

PERFUME. n. s. [parfume, French.]

1. Strong odour of sweetness used to give scents to other things.

Pomanders and knots of powders for drying rheums are not so strong as perfumes; you may have them continually in your hand, whereas perfumes you can take but at times. Bacon.

Perfumes, though gross bodies that may be sensibly wasted, yet fill the air, so that we can put our nose in no part of the room where a perfume is burned, but we smell it. Digby.

2. Sweet odour; fragrance.

Ev'n the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom, And trodden weeds send out a rich perfume. Addison.

No rich perfumes refresh the fruitful field, Nor fragrant herbs their native incense yield. Pope.

Pinks and roses bloom, And ev'ry bramble sheds perfume. Gay.

To PERFUME. v. a. [from the noun.] To scent; to impregnate with sweet scent.

Your papers Let me have them very well perfum'd, For she is sweeter than perfume itself

To whom they go. Shakspeare.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs, And hush't with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber, Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great, Under the canopies of costly state,

And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shakspeare.

Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose, With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd. Shakspeare.

The distilled water of wild poppy, mingled at half with rose water, take with some mixture of a few cloves in a perfuming pan. Bacon.

Smells adhere to hard bodies; as in perfuming of gloves, which sheweth them corporeal. Bacon.

PER

The pains she takes are vainly meant
To hide her amorous heart,
'Tis like perfuming an ill scent,
The smell's too strong for art. Granville.
See spicy clouds from lowly Sharon rise,
And Carmel's flow'ry top perfumes the skies! Pope.
PERFUMER. n. f. [from perfume.] One whose trade is to sell things made to gratify the scent.

A moss the perfumers have out of apple trees, that bath an excellent scent. Bacon.

First issued from perfumers shops
A crowd of fashionable fops. Swift.

PERFUMCTORILY. adv. [perfumctoriè, Lat.]
Carelessly; negligently; in such a manner as to satisfy external form.

His majesty casting his eye perfumctorily upon it,
and believing it had been drawn by mature advice, no sooner received it, than he delivered it to the lord keeper. Clarendon.

Lay seriously to heart the clearness and evidence of these proofs, and not perfumctorily pass over all the passages of the gospel, which are written on purpose that we may believe, without weighing them.
Lucas.

Whereas all logick is reducible to the four principal operations of the mind, the two first of these have been handled by Aristotle very perfumctorily;
of the fourth he has said nothing at all. Baker.

PERFUMCTORY. adj. [perfumctoriè, Lat.]
Slight; careless; negligent.

A transient and perfumctory examination of things leads men into considerable mistakes, which a more correct and rigorous scrutiny would have detected.
Woodward.

PERFUSE. v. a. [perfusus, Latin.] To tincture; to overspread.

These dregs immediately perfuse the blood with melancholy, and cause obstructions. Harvey.

PERHAPS. adv. [per and hap.] Peradventure;
it may be.

Perhaps the good old man that kiss'd his son,
And left a blessing on his head,
His arms about him spread,

Hopes yet to see him ere his glass be run. Flatman.
Somewhat excellent may be invented, perhaps more excellent than the first design, though Virgil must be still excepted, when that perhaps takes place. Dryden.

His thoughts inspir'd his tongue,
And all his soul receiv'd a real love;
Perhaps new graces darted from her eyes,
Perhaps soft pity charm'd his yielding soul,
Perhaps her love, perhaps her kingdom charm'd him.
Smith.

It is not his intent to live in such ways as, for ought we know, God may perhaps pardon, but to be diligent in such ways, as we know that God will infalibly reward. Law.

PERIAPT. n. f. [περιπτω.] Amulet; charm worn as preservative against disease or mischief. Hanmer.

The regent conquers, and the Frenchmen fly:
Now help, ye charming spells and periapts. Shakspeare.

PERICARDIUM. n. f. [περι and καρδια; pericarde, Fr.] A thin membrane of a conick figure that resembles a purse, and contains the heart in its cavity: its basis is pierced in five places, for the passage of the vessels which enter and come out of the heart: the use of the pericardium is to contain a small quantity of clear water, which is separated by small glands in it, that the surface of the heart may not grow dry by its continual motion.
Quincy.

PERICARPIUM. n. f. [περι and καρπος; pericarpe, Fr.] In botany, a pellicle or thin membrane encompassing the fruit or grain of a plant, or that part of a fruit that envelopes the seed.

Besides this use of the pulp or pericarpium for the guard of the seed, it serves also for the sustenance of animals, Ray.

PER

PERICLITATION. n. f. [from periclitor,
Latin; pericliter, French.]

1. The state of being in danger.

2. Trial; experiment.

PERICRANIUM. n. f. [from περι and κρα-nium; pericrane, Fr.] The membrane that covers the skull: it is a very thin and nervous membrane of an exquisite sense, such as covers immediately not only the cranium, but all the bones of the body, except the teeth; for which reason it is also called the periosteum.

Quincy.

Having divided the pericranium, I saw a fissure running the whole length of the wound. Wiseman.

PERICULOUS. adj. [periculosus, Latin.] Dangerous; jeopardous; hazardous. Not in use.

As the moon every seventh day arriveth unto a contrary sign, so Saturn, which remaineth about as many years in one sign, and holdeth the same consideration in years as the moon in days, doth cause these periculous periods. Brown.

PERIERGY. n. f. [περι and εργον.] Needless caution in an operation; unnecessary diligence.

PERIGEE. } n. f. [περι and γη; perigee, PERIGEUM. } Fr.] That point in the heavens, wherein a planet is said to be in its nearest distance possible from the earth. Harris.

By the proportion of its motion, it was at the creation, at the beginning of Aries, and the perigeum or nearest point in Libra. Brown.

PERIHELIVM. n. f. [περι and ήλιος; peri-belie, Fr.] That point of a planet's orbit, wherein it is nearest the sun. Harris.

Sir Isaac Newton has made it probable, that the comet, which appeared in 1680, by approaching to the sun in its perihelium, acquired such a degree of heat, as to be 50000 years a cooling. Cheyne.

PERIL. n. f. [peril, Fr. perikel, Dut. periculum, Latin.]

1. Danger; hazard; jeopardy.

Dear Pirocles, be liberal unto me of those things, which have made you indeed precious to the world,
and now doubt not to tell of your perils. Sidney.
How many perils do infold

The righteous man to make him daily fall? Spenser.
In the act what perils shall we find,

If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd. Daniel.

The love and pious duty which you pay,
Have pass'd the perils of so hard a way. Dryden.

Strong, healthy and young people are more in peril
by pestilential fevers, than the weak and old. Arbut.

2. Denunciation; danger denounced.

I told her,
On your displeasure's peril,
She should not visit you. Shakspeare.

PERILOUS. adj. [perileux, Fr. from peril.]

1. Dangerous; hazardous; full of danger.

Alterations in the service of God, for that they impair the credit of religion, are therefore perilous in common-weals, which have no continuance longer than religion hath all reverence done unto it.
Hooker.

Her guard is chastity;
She that has that is clad in complete steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths, Infamous hills and sandy perilous wilds. Milton.

Dictate propitious to my duteous ear,
What arts can captivate the changeful seer:
For perilous th' assay, unheard the toil
T' elude the prescience of a God by guile. Pope.

2. It is used by way of emphasis, or ludicrous exaggeration of any thing bad.

Thus was th' accomplish'd squire endu'd
With gifts and knowledge perilous shrewd. Hudibras.

PER

3. Smart; witty. In this sense it is, I think, only applied to children, and probably obtained its signification from the notion, that children eminent for wit do not live; a witty boy was therefore a perilous boy, or a boy in danger. It is vulgarly parlous.

'Tis a per'lous boy,

Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakspeare.

PERILOUSLY. adv. [from perilous.] Dangerously.

PERILOUSNESS. n. f. [from perilous.] Dangerousness.

PERIMETER. n. f. [περι and μετρος; perimetre, Fr.] The compass or sum of all the sides which bound any figure of what kind soever, whether rectilinear or mixed.

By compressing the glasses still more, the diameter of this ring would increase, and the breadth of its orbit or perimeter decrease, until another new colour emerged in the centre of the last. Newton.

PERIOD. n. f. [periode, Fr. περίοδος.]

1. A circuit.

2. Time in which any thing is performed, so as to begin again in the same manner.

Tell these, that the sun is fixed in the centre, that the earth with all the planets roll round the sun in their several periods; they cannot admit a syllable of this new doctrine. Watts.

3. A stated number of years; a round of time, at the end of which the things comprised within the calculation shall return to the state in which they were at the beginning.

A cycle or period is an account of years that has a beginning and end, and begins again as often as it ends. Holder.

We stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period, and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.

4. The end or conclusion.

If my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play. Shakspeare.

There is nothing so secret that shall not be brought to light within the compass of our world; whatsoever concerns this sublunary world in the whole extent of its duration, from the chaos to the last period.
Burnet's Theory.

What anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots and their last fatal periods!
Oh! 'tis a dreadful interval of time. Addison.

5. The state at which any thing terminates.

Beauty's empires, like to greater states,
Have certain periods set, and hidden fates. Suckling.
Light-conserving stones must be set in the sun before they retain light, and the light will appear greater or lesser, until they come to their utmost period. Digby.

6. Length of duration.

Some experiment would be made how by art to make plants more lasting than their ordinary period;
as to make a stalk of wheat last a whole year. Bacon.

7. A complete sentence from one full stop to another.

Periods are beautiful, when they are not too long:
for so they have their strength too as in a pike or javelin. Ben Jonson.

Is this the confidence you gave me?
Lean on it safely, not a period
Shall be unpaid for me. Milton.

Syllogism is made use of to discover a fallacy, cunningly wrapt up in a smooth period. Locke.

For the assistance of memories, the first words of every period in every page may be written in distinct colours. Watts.

8. A course of events, or series of things memorably terminated: as, the periods of an empire.

From the tongue
The unfinished period falls. Thomson's Spring.
PERIOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To put an end to. A bad word.

Your letter he desires
To those have shut him up, which falling to him, Periods his comfort. Shakspeare's Timon.
PERIODICAL. } adj. [periodique, Fr. from PERIODICK. } period.]

1. Circular; making a circuit; making a revolution.

Was the earth's periodick motion always in the same plane with that of the diurnal, we should miss of those kindly increases of day and night. Derham.

Four moons perpetually roll round the planet
Jupiter, and are carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts on the Mind.

2. Happening by revolution at some stated time.

Astrological undertakers would raise men out of some slimy soil, impregnated with the influence of the stars upon some remarkable and periodical conjunctions. Bentley.

3. Regular; performing some action at stated times.

The confusion of mountains and hollows furnished me with a probable reason for those periodical fountains in Switzerland, which flow only at such particular hours of the day. Addison.

4. Relating to periods or revolutions.

It is implicitly denied by Aristotle in his politicks, in that discourse against Plato, who measured the vicissitude and mutation of states by a periodical fatality of number. Brown.

PERIODICALLY. adv. [from periodical.]
At stated periods.

The three tides ought to be understood of the space of the night and day, then there will be a regular flux and reflux thrice in that time every eight hours periodically. Broom.

PERIOSTEUM. n. s. [περί and ὅστων; perioste,
French.]

All the bones are covered with a very sensible membrane, called the periosteum. Cheyne.

PERIPHERY. n. s. [περί and φέρω; peri-pherie, Fr.] Circumference.

Neither is this sole vital faculty sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery or outward parts. Harvey.

PERIPHRASE. v. a. [periphrazer, Fr.]
To express one word by many; to express by circumlocution.

PERIPHRASTIC. n. s. [περιφραστικός; periphraze,
Fr.] Circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one: as, for death, we may say, the loss of life.

She contains all bliss,

And makes the world but her periphraze. Cleavel.
They make the gates of Thebes and the mouths of this river a constant periphraze for this number seven. Brown.

They shew their learning uselessly, and make a long periphraze on every word of the book they explain. Watts.

The periphrazes and circumlocutions, by which Homer expresses the single act of dying, have supplied succeeding poets with all their manners of phrasing it. Pope.

PERIPHRASTICAL. adj. [from periphraze.] Circumlocutory; expressing the sense of one word in many.

PERIPNEUMONY. } n. s. [περί and πνεύμων;
PERIPNEUMONIA. } peripneumonie, Fr.]

An inflammation of the lungs.

Lungs oft imbibing phlegmatick and melancolick humours, are now and then deprehended schirrous, by dissipation of the subtiler parts, and lapidification of the grosser that may be left indurated, through the gross reliques of peripneumonia or inflammation of the lungs. Harvey.

A peripneumony is the last fatal symptom of every disease; for no body dies without a stagnation of the blood in the lungs, which is the total extinction of breath. Arbutnot.

PERISH. v. u. [perir, Fr. perere, Lat.]

1. To die; to be destroyed; to be lost; to come to nothing. It seems to have for or with before a cause, and by before an instrument. Locke has by before the cause.

I burn, I pine, I perish,
If I achieve not this young modest girl. Shakspeare.
If I have seen any perish for want of cloathing,
then let mine arm fall from my shoulder blade. Job.
He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword. Job.
They perish quickly from off the good land. Deuteronomy.

I perish with hunger. Luke.
The sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth to perish without assistance or pity. Locke.

Characters drawn on dust, that the first breath of wind effaces, are altogether as useful as the thoughts of a soul that perish in thinking. Locke.

Exposing their children, and leaving them in the fields to perish by want, has been the practice. Locke.

Still when the lust of tyrant pow'r succeeds,
Some Athens perishes, or some Tully bleeds. Pope.

In the Illiad, the anger of Achilles had caused the death of so many Grecians; and in the Odyssey, the subjects perished through their own fault. Pope.

2. To be in a perpetual state of decay.

Duration, and time which is a part of it, is the idea we have of perishing distance, of which no two parts exist together, but follow in succession; as expansion is the idea of lasting distance, all whose parts exist together. Locke.

3. To be lost eternally.

These, as natural brute beasts made to be destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not, and shall utterly perish. 2 Peter.

O suffer me not to perish in my sins: Lord carest thou not that I perish, who wilt that all should be saved, and that none should perish? Moreton.

PERISH. v. a. To destroy; to decay.
Not in use.

The splitting rocks cow'r'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides;
Because thy flinty heart more hard than they,
Might in thy palace perish Margaret. Shakspeare.

Rise, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

He was so reserved, that he would impart his secrets to nobody; whereupon this closeness did a little perish his understandings. Collier.

Familiar now with grief your ears refrain,
And in the public woe forget your own,
You weep not for a perish'd lord alone. Pope.

PERISHABLE. adj. [from perish.] Liable to perish; subject to decay; of short duration.

We derogate from his eternal power to ascribe to them the same dominion over our immortal souls, which they have over all bodily substances and perishable natures. Raleigh.

To these purposes nothing can so much contribute as medals of undoubted authority not perishable by time, nor confined to any certain place. Addison.

It is princes greatest present felicity to reign in their subjects hearts; but these are too perishable to preserve their memories, which can only be done by the pens of faithful historians. Swift.

Human nature could not sustain the reflection of having all its schemes and expectations to determine with this frail and perishable composition of flesh and blood. Rogers.

Thrice has he seen the perishable kind
Of men decay. Pope.

PERISHABLENESS. n. s. [from perishable.] Liable to be destroyed; liable to decay.

Suppose an island separate from all commerce, but having nothing because of its commonness and perish-ableness fit to supply the place of money; what reason could any have to enlarge possessions beyond the use of his family? Locke.

PERISTALTIC. adj. [περιστάλλω; peristaltique, Fr.]

Peristaltick motion is that vermicular motion of the guts, which is made by the contraction of the spiral fibres, whereby the excrements are pressed downwards and voided. Quincy.

The peristaltick motion of the guts, and the continual expression of the fluids, will not suffer the least matter to be applied to one point the least instant.
Arbutnot.

PERISTE'RIUM. n. s. The herb vervain.
Dict.

PERISTY'LE. n. s. [peristyle, Fr.] A circular range of pillars.

The Villa Gordiana had a perystile of two hundred pillars. Arbutnot.

PERISYSTOLE. n. s. [πῆσι and συστολή.] The pause or interval between the two motions of the heart or pulse; namely, that of the systole or contraction of the heart, and that of the diastole or dilatation. Dict.

PERITONE'UM. n. s. [περιτόναιον; peritonee, Fr.] This lies immediately under the muscles of the lower belly, and is a thin soft membrane, which encloses all the bowels contained in the lower belly, covering all the inside of its cavity. Dict.

Wounds penetrating into the belly, are such as reach no farther inward than to the peritoneum.
Wifeman.

PERJURE. n. s. [perjurus, Lat.] A perjured or forsworn person. Not in use.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjure, thou simular of virtue,
Thou art incestuous. Shakspeare.

PERJURE. v. a. [perjuro, Latin.]
To forswear; to taint with perjury. It is used with the reciprocal pronoun: as,
he perjured himself.

Who should be trusted now, when the right hand
Is perjur'd to the bosom? Shakspeare.

The law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for perjured persons.
1 Timothy.

PERJURER. n. s. [from perjure.] One that swears falsely.

The common oath of the Scythians was by the sword and fire; for that they accounted those two special divine powers, which should work vengeance on the perjurers. Spenser.

PERJURY. n. s. [perjurium, Latin.] False oath.

My great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Cried aloud—What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?
And so he vanish'd. Shakspeare.

PERIWIG. n. s. [perruque, Fr.] Adsciti-ous hair; hair not natural, worn by way of ornament or concealment of baldness.

Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig. Shakspeare.

It offends me to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakspeare.

The sun's Dishevel'd beams and scatter'd fires
Serve but for ladies periwigs and tires
In lovers sonnets. Donne.

Madam Time, be ever bald,
I'll not thy periwig be call'd. Cleaveland.

For vailing of their visages his highness and the marquiss bought each a periwig, somewhat to overshadow their foreheads. Wotton.

They used false hair or periwigs. Arbutnot.
From her own head Megara takes A periwig of twisted snakes. Swift.

PERIWIG. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress in false hair.

Now when the winter's keener breath began
To crystallize the Baltick ocean,
To glaze the lakes, to bridle up the floods,
And periwig with snow the bald-pate woods.
Sylvester.

Near the door an entrance gapes,
Crouded round with antick shapes,
Discord periwig'd with snakes,
See the dreadful strides she takes. Swift.

PERIWINKLE. n. s.

1. A small shellfish: a kind of fish snail.

Thetis is represented by a lady of a brownish complexion, her hair dishevelled about her shoulders, upon her head a coronet of periwinkle and esclop shells.

2. [climatis.] A plant.

There are in use, for the prevention of the cramp, bands of green periwinkle tied about the calf of the leg.

The common simples with us are comfrey, bugle, ladies mantle, and periwinkle.

PERK. v. n. [from perch, Skinner.] To hold up the head with an affected briskness.

If, after all, you think it a disgrace,
That Edward's misf thus perks it in your face;
To see a piece of failing flesh and blood,
In all the rest so impudently good;
Faith, let the modest matrons of the town
Come here in crowds, and stare the strumpet down.

PERK. v. a. To dress; to prank.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humblelivers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glitt'ring grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.

PERK. adj. Pert; brisk; airy. Obsolete.

My ragged ronts
Went in the wind, and wag their wriggle tails,
Peak as a peacock, but nought avails.

PERILOUS. adj. [from perilous.] Dangerous; full of hazard.

A perilous passage lies,
Where many mermaids haunt, making false melodies.

PERLOUS. adj. [from perilous.] Dangerous; full of hazard.

PERMAGY. n. s. A little Turkish boot.

PERMANENCE. } n. s. [from permanent.] PERMANENCY. }

1. Duration; consistency; continuance in the same state; lastingness.

Salt, they say, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended together, but would remain incompact.

2. Continuance in rest.

Such a punctum to our conceptions is almost equivalent to permanency and rest.

PERMANENT. adj. [from permanent, French; permanens, Latin.]

1. Durable; not decaying; unchanged.

If the authority of the maker do prove unchangeableness in the laws which God hath made, then must all laws which he hath made be necessarily for ever permanent, though they be but of circumstance only.

2. Of long continuance.

His meaning is, that in these, or such other light injuries, which either leave no permanent effect, or only such as may be born without any great prejudice, we should exercise our patience.

PERMANENTLY. adv. [from permanent.]

Durably; lastingly.

PERMANSION. n. s. [from permaneo, Latin.] Continuance.

Although we allow that hares may exchange their sex sometimes, yet not in that vicissitude it is presumed; from female unto male, and from male to female again, and so in a circle without a permanston in either.

PERMEABLE. adj. [from permeo, Latin.] Such as may be passed through.

The pores of a bladder are not easily permeable by air.

PERMEANT. adj. [from permeans, Latin.] Passing through.

It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts at the mouths of the meseraicks.

PERMEATE. v. a. [from permeo, Latin.] To pass through.

This heat evaporates and elevates the water of the abyss, pervading not only the fissures, but the very bodies of the strata, permeating the interstices of the sand, or other matter whereof they consist.

PERMEATION. n. s. [from permeate.] The act of passing through.

PERMISSIBLE. adj. [from permisceo, Latin.] Such as may be mingled.

PERMISSIBLE. adj. [from permisus, Latin.] What may be permitted.

With thy permission then, and thus forewarn'd,
The willinger I go.

PERMISSIVE. adj. [from permittere, Latin.] 1. Granting liberty, not favour; not hindering, though not approving.

We bid this be done,
When evil deeds have their permissive pass,
And not the punishment.

2. Granted; suffered without hinderance; not authorized or favoured.

If this doth authorize usury, which before was but permissive, it is better to mitigate usury by declaration, than to suffer it to rage by connivance.

PERMISSIVELY. adv. [from permissive.] By bare allowance; without hinderance.

As to a war for the propagation of the christian faith, I would be glad to hear spoken concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to christian princes to design it.

PERMISSION. n. s. [from permissio, Latin.] The act of mixing.

PERMIT. v. a. [from permittere, Latin.] 1. To allow without command.

What things God doth neither command nor forbid, the same he permitteth with approbation either to be done or left undone.

2. To suffer without authorising or approving.

Women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak.

3. To allow; to suffer.

We should not permit an allowed, possible, great and weighty good to slip out of our thoughts, without leaving any relish, any desire of itself there.

After men have acquired as much as the laws permit them, they have nothing to do but to take care of the publick.

4. To give up; to resign.

Nor love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liv'st,
Live well; how long, how short, permit to heav'n.

If the course of truth be permitted unto itself it cannot escape many errors.

PERMITTANCE. n. s. [from permittere.] Allowance; forbearance of opposition; permission. A bad word.

When this system of air comes, by divine permittance, to be corrupted by poisonous acrimonious steams, what havock is made in all living creatures?

PERMIXTION. n. s. [from permixtio, Latin.] The act of mingling; the state of being mingled.

They fell into the opposite extremity of one nature in Christ, the divine and human natures in Christ, in their conceits, by permixtion and confusion of substances, and of properties growing into one upon their adunation.

PERMUTATION. n. s. [from permutatio, Latin.] Exchange of one for another.

A permutation of number is frequent in languages.

PERMUTE. v. a. [from permutare, Latin.] To exchange.

PERNICIOUS. adj. [from perniciosus, Latin; pernicieux, French.] 1. Mischievous in the highest degree; destructive.

To remove all out of the church, whereat they shew themselves to be sorrowful, would be, as we are persuaded, hurtful, if not pernicious thereunto.

2. [from pernix, Latin.] Quick. An use which I have found only in Milton, and which, as it produces an ambiguity, ought not to be imitated.

Part incentive reed
Provide, pernicious with one touch to fire.

PERNICIOUSLY. adv. [from perniciosus.] Destructively; mischievously; ruinously.

Some wilful wits wilfully against their own knowledge, perniciously against their own conscience, have taught.

PERNICIOUSNESS. n. s. [from perniciosus.] The quality of being pernicious.

Others armed with hard shells, others with prickles, the rest that have no such armature endued with great swiftness or pernicity.

PERNICITY. n. s. [from pernix.] Swiftness; celerity.

Others armed with hard shells, others with prickles, the rest that have no such armature endued with great swiftness or pernicity.

PERORATION. n. f. [peroratio, Lat.] The conclusion of an oration.

What means this passionate discourse?

This peroration with such circumstances? Shaksp.

True woman to the last—my peroration

I come to speak in spite of suffocation. Smart.

PERPEND. v. a. [perpendo, Latin.] To weigh in the mind; to consider attentively.

Thus it remains and the remainder thus;

Perpend. Shaksp.

PERPENDICULAR. adj. [perpendiculaire, Fr. perpendicularis, Lat.]

1. Crossing any other line at right angles.

Of two lines, if one be perpendicular, the other is perpendicular too.

If in a line oblique their atoms rove,

Or in a perpendicular they move;

If some advance not slower in their race,

And some more swift, how could they be entangled? Blackmore.

The angle of incidence, is that angle, which the line, described by the incident ray, contains with the perpendicular to the reflecting or refracting surface at the point of incidence. Newton.

2. Cutting the horizon at right angles.

Some define the perpendicular altitude of the highest mountains to be four miles. Brown.

PERPENDICULAR. n. f. A line crossing the horizon at right angles.

Though the quantity of water thus rising and falling be nearly constant as to the whole, yet it varies in the several parts of the globe; by reason that the vapours float in the atmosphere, and are not restored down again in a perpendicular upon the same precise tract of land. Woodward.

PERPENDICULARLY. adv. [from perpendicular.]

1. In such a manner as to cut another line at right angles.

2. In the direction of a straight line up and down.

Ten masts attach make not the altitude,

Which thou hast perpendicularly fall'n. Shaksp.

Irons refrigerated north and south, not only acquire a directive faculty, but if cooled upright and perpendicularly, they will also obtain the same. Brown.

Shoot up an arrow perpendicularly from the earth, the arrow will return to your foot again. More.

All weights naturally move perpendicularly downward. Ray.

PERPENDICULARITY. n. f. [from perpendicular.] The state of being perpendicular.

The meeting of two lines is the primary essential mode or difference of an angle; the perpendicularity of these lines is the difference of a right angle. Watts.

PERPENSION. n. f. [from perpend.] Consideration. Not in use.

Unto reasonable perpensions it hath no place in some sciences. Brown.

PERPETRATE. v. a. [perpetro, Lat. perpetrer, Fr.]

1. To commit; to act. Always in an ill sense.

Hear of such a crime

As tragick poets, since the birth of time,

Ne'er feign'd a thronging audience to amaze;

But true and perpetrated in our days. Tate.

My tender infants or my careful fire,

These they returning will to death require,

Will perpetrate on them the first design,

And take the forfeit of their heads for mine. Dryd.

The forest, which, in after-times, Fierce Romulus, for perpetrated crimes, A sacred refuge made. Dryden.

2. It is used by Butler in a neutral sense, in compliance with his verse, but not properly.

Success, the mark no mortal wit,

Or forest hand can always hit;

For whatso'er we perpetrate,

We do but row, we're steer'd by fate. Hudibras.

PERPETRATION. n. f. [from perpetrate.]

1. The act of committing a crime.

A desperate discontented assassin would, after the perpetration, have honested a mere private revenge. Wotton.

A woman, who lends an ear to a seducer, may be insensibly drawn into the perpetration of the most violent acts. Clarissa.

2. A bad action.

The strokes of divine vengeance, or of men's own consciences, always attend injurious perpetrations. King Charles.

PERPETUAL. adj. [perpetuel, Fr. perpetuus, Lat.]

1. Never ceasing; eternal with respect to futurity.

Under the same moral, and therefore under the same perpetual law. Holyday.

Mine is a love, which must perpetual be,

If you can be so just as I am true. Dryden.

2. Continual; uninterrupted; perennial.

Within those banks rivers now

Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train. Milton.

By the muscular motion and perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbutnot.

3. Perpetual screw. A screw which acts against the teeth of a wheel, and continues its action without end.

A perpetual screw hath the motion of a wheel and the force of a screw, being both infinite. Wilkins.

PERPETUALLY. adv. [from perpetual.]

Constantly; continually; incessantly.

This verse is every where founding the very thing in your ears; yet the numbers are perpetually varied, so that the same sounds are never repeated twice. Dryden.

In passing from them to great distances, doth it not grow denser and denser perpetually; and thereby cause the gravity of those great bodies towards one another? Newton.

The bible and common prayer book in the vulgar tongue, being perpetually read in churches, have proved a kind of standard for language, especially to the common people. Swift.

PERPETUATE. v. a. [perpetuer, Fr. perpetuo, Lat.]

1. To make perpetual; to preserve from extinction; to eternize.

Medals, that are at present only mere curiosities, may be of use in the ordinary commerce of life, and at the same time perpetuate the glories of her majesty's reign. Addison.

Man cannot devise any other method so likely to preserve and perpetuate the knowledge and belief of a revelation so necessary to mankind. Forbes.

2. To continue without cessation or intermission.

What is it, but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, resounding for ever in our ears? to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity, till they awake from their lethargick sleep, and arise from so mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life. Hammond.

PERPETUATION. n. f. [from perpetuate.]

The act of making perpetual; incessant continuance.

Nourishing hair upon the moles of the face, is the perpetuation of a very ancient custom. Brown.

PERPETUITY. n. f. [perpetuité, French; perpetuitas, Latin.]

1. Duration to all futurity.

For men to alter those laws, which God for perpetuity hath established, were presumption most intolerable. Hooker.

Yet am I better

Than one that's sick o' th' gout, since he had rather Groan so in perpetuity, than be cur'd

By the sure physician, death. Shaksp.

Time as long again

Would be fill'd up with our thanks;

And yet we should, for perpetuity, Go hence in debt. Shaksp.

Nothing wanted to his noble and heroic intentions, but only to give perpetuity to that which was in his time so happily established. Bacon.

There can be no other assurance of the perpetuity of this church, but what we have from him that built it. Pearson.

2. Exemption from intermission or cessation.

A cycle or period begins again as often as it ends, and so obtains a perpetuity. Holder.

What the gospel enjoins is a constant disposition of mind to practice all christian virtues, as often as time and opportunity require; and not a perpetuity of exercise and action; it being impossible at one and the same time to discharge variety of duties. Nelson.

3. Something of which there is no end.

A mess of pottage for a birth-right, a present repast for a perpetuity. South.

The ennobling property of the pleasure, that accrues to a man from religion, is, that he that has the property, may be also sure of the perpetuity. South.

The laws of God as well as of the land

Abhor a perpetuity should stand;

Estates have wings, and hang in fortune's power. Pope.

PERPLEX. v. a. [perplexus, Lat.]

1. To disturb with doubtful notions; to entangle; to make anxious; to tease with suspense or ambiguity; to distract; to embarrass; to puzzle.

Being greatly perplexed in his mind, he determined to go into Persia. Maccabees.

Themselves with doubts the day and night perplex. Denham.

He perplexes the minds of the fair sex, with nice speculations of philosophy, when he should engage their hearts. Dryden.

We can distinguish no general truths, or at least shall be apt to perplex the mind. Locke.

My way of stating the main question is plain and clear; yours obscure and ambiguous: mine is fitted to instruct and inform; yours to perplex and confound a reader. Waterland.

2. To make intricate; to involve; to complicate.

Their way

Lies through the perplex'd paths of this dreere wood. Milton.

Some persons must be found out, already known by history, whom we may make the actors and personages of this fable. Broome.

PERSONAL. adj. [personel, Fr. personalis, Lat.]

1. Belonging to men or women, not to things; not real.

Every man so termed by way of personal difference only. Hooker.

2. Affecting individuals or particular people; peculiar; proper to him or her; relating to one's private actions or character.

For my part,
I know no personal cause to spurn at him;
But for the general. Shakspeare.

It could not mean, that Cain as elder had a natural dominion over Abel, for the words are conditional; if thou doest well: and so personal to Cain. Locke.

Publick reproofs of sin are general, though by this they lose a great deal of their effect; but in private conversations the application may be more personal, and the proofs when so directed come home. Rogers.

If he imagines there may be no personal pride, vain fondness of themselves, in those that are patched and dressed out with so much glitter of art or ornament, let him only make the experiment. Larv.

3. Present; not acting by representative.

The favourites that the absent king
In deputation left,
When he was personal in the Irish war. Shakspeare.

This immediate and personal speaking of God almighty to Abraham, Job, and Moses, made not all his precepts and dictates, delivered in this manner, simply and eternally moral; for some of them were personal, and many of them ceremonial and judicial. White.

4. Exterior; corporal.

This heroic constancy determined him to desire in marriage a princess, whose personal charms were now become the least part of her character. Addison.

5. [In law.] Something moveable; something appendant to the person, as money; not real, as land.

This sin of kind not personal,
But real and hereditary was. Davies.

6. [In grammar.] A personal verb is that which has all the regular modification of the three persons; opposed to impersonal, that has only the third.

PERSONALITY. n. s. [from personal.] The existence or individuality of any one.

Person belongs only to intelligent agents, capable of a law, and happiness and misery: this personality extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by consciousness, whereby it imputes to itself past actions, just upon the same ground that it does the present. Locke.

PERSONALLY. adv. [from personal.]

1. In person; in presence; not by representative.

Approbation not only they give, who personally declare their assent by voice, sign, or act, but also when others do it in their names. Hooker.

I could not personally deliver to her
What you commanded me, but by her woman
I sent your message. Shakspeare.

There are many reasons, why matters of such a wonderful nature should not be taken notice of by those pagan writers, who lived before our Saviour's disciples had personally appeared among them. Addison.

2. With respect to an individual; particularly.

She bore a mortal hatred to the house of Lancaster, and personally to the king. Bacon.

It has been the constant practice of the Jesuits to send over emissaries, with instructions to personate themselves members of the several sects amongst us. Swift.

4. To counterfeit; to feign. Little in use.

Piety is opposed to that personated devotion under which any kind of impiety is disguised. Hammond.

Thus have I played with the dogmatist in a personated scepticism. Glanville.

5. To resemble.

The lofty cedar personates thee. Shakspeare.

6. To make a representative of, as in picture. Out of use.

Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fixt,
One do I personate of Timon's frame,
Whom fortune with her iv'ry hand wasts to her. Shakspeare.

7. To describe. Out of use.

I am thinking what I shall say; it must be a personating of himself; a satyr against the softness of prosperity. Shakspeare.

I will drop in his way some obscure epistles of love, wherein, by the colour of his beard, the shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the expreasure of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself most feelingly personated. Shakspeare.

PERSONATION. n. s. [from personate.]

Counterfeiting of another person.

This being one of the strangest examples of a personation that ever was, it deserveth to be discovered and related at the full. Bacon.

PERSONIFICATION. n. s. [from personify.]

Prosopœia; the change of things to persons: as,
Confusion heard his voice. Milton.

TO PERSONIFY. v. a. [from person.] To

If it tend to danger, they turn about the perspective, and shew it so little, that he can scarce discern it. Denham.

It may import us in this calm, to hearken to the storms raising abroad; and by the best perspectives, to discover from what coasts they break. Temple.

You hold the glass, but turn the perspective,
And farther off the lessen'd object drive. Dryden.

Faith for reason's glimmering light shall give Her immortal perspective. Prior.

2. The science by which things are ranged in picture, according to their appearance in their real situation.

Medals have represented their buildings according to the rules of perspectiva. Addison.

3. View; viltto.

Lofty trees, with sacred shades,
And perspectives of pleasant glades,
Where nymphs of brightest form appear. Dryden.

PERSPECTIVE. adj. Relating to the science of vision; optick; optical.

We have perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations; and out of things uncoloured and transparent, we can represent unto you all several colours. Bacon.

PERSPICACIOUS. adj. [perspicax, Lat.]

Quick-sighted; sharp of sight.

It is as nice and tender in feeling, as it can be perspicacious and quick in seeing. South.

PERSPICACIOUSNESS. n. s. [from perspicacious.] Quickness of sight.

PERSPICACITY. n. s. [perspicacitè, Fr.] Quickness of sight.

He that laid the foundations of the earth cannot be excluded the secrecy of the mountains; nor can there any thing escape the perspicacity of those eyes, which were before light, and in whose optics there is no opacity. Brown.

PERSPICIENCE. n. s. [perspicens, Latin.]

The act of looking sharply. Diët.

PERSPICIL. n. s. [perspicillum, Latin.] A glass through which things are viewed; an optick glass. Little used.

Let truth be
Ne'er so far distant, yet chronology,
Sharp-sighted as the eagle's eye, that can
Out-stare the broad-beam'd day's meridian,
Will have a perspicil to find her out,
And through the night of error and dark doubt,
Discern the dawn of truth's eternal ray,
As when the rosy morn buds into day. Craslow.

The perspicil, as well as the needle, hath enlarged the habitable world. Glanville.

PERSPICUITY. n. s. [perspicuitè, Fr. from perspicuous.]

1. Transparency; translucency; diaphaneity.

As for diaphaneity and perspicuity, it enjoyeth that most eminently, as having its earthy and salinous parts so exactly resolved, that its body is left imporous. Brown.

2. Clearness to the mind; easiness to be understood; freedom from obscurity or ambiguity.

The verses containing precepts, have not so much need of ornament as of perspicuity. Dryden.

Perspicuity consists in the using of proper terms for the thoughts, which a man would have pass from his own mind into that of another's. Locke.

PERSPICUOUS. adj. [perspicuus, Lat.]

1. Transparent; clear; such as may be seen through; diaphanous; translucent; not opaque.

As contrary causes produce the like effects, so even the same proceed from black and white; for the clear and perspicuous body effecteth white, and that white a black. Peacham.

2. Clear to the understanding; not obscure; not ambiguous.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,
Whose grossness little characters sum up. Shaks.
All this is so perspicuous, so undeniable, that I need not be over industrious in the proof of it. Spratt.

PER

PERSPI'CUOUSLY. adv. [from perspicuous.]
Clearly; not obscurely.

The case is no sooner made than resolved; if it be made not enwrapped, but plainly and perspicuously.
Bacon.

PERSPI'CUOUSNESS. n. s. [from perspicuous.] Clearness; freedom from obscurity; transparency; diaphaneity.

PERSPI'RABLE. adj. [from perspire.]

1. Such as may be emitted by the cuticular pores.

In an animal under a course of hard labour, aliment too vaporous or perspirable will subject it to too strong a perspiration, debility, and sudden death.
Arbutnot.

2. Perspiring; emitting perspiration. Not proper.

Hair cometh not upon the palms of the hands or soles of the feet, which are parts more perspirable: and children are not hairy, for that their skins are most perspirable.
Bacon.

That this attraction is performed by effluvia, is plain and granted by most; for electricks will not commonly attract, unless they become perspirable.
Brown.

PERSPIRA'TION. n. s. [from perspire.]
Excretion by the cuticular pores.

Insensible perspiration is the last and most perfect action of animal digestion.
Arbutnot.

To PERSUA'DE. v. a. [persuadeo, Latin; persuader, Fr.]

1. To bring to any particular opinion.

Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind.
Romans.

We are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation.
Hebrews.

Joy over them that are persuaded to salvation.
2 Esdras.

Let a man be ever so well persuaded of the advantages of virtue, yet, till he hungers and thirsts after righteousness, his will will not be determined to any action in pursuit of this confessed great good.
Locke.

Men should seriously persuade themselves, that they have here no abiding place, but are only in their passage to the heavenly Jerusalem. Wake.

2. To influence by argument or expostulation. Persuasion seems rather applicable to the passions, and argument to the reason: but this is not always observed.

Philoclea's beauty not only persuaded, but so persuaded as all hearts must yield: Pamela's beauty used violence, and such as no heart could resist.
Sidney.

They that were with Simon, being led with covetousness, were persuaded for money. 2 Maccabees.

To sit cross-leg'd or with our fingers pectinated, is accounted bad, and friends will persuade us from it.
Brown.

How incongruous would it be for a mathematician to persuade with eloquence to use all imaginable insinuations and intreaties that he might prevail with his hearers to believe that three and three make six.
Wilkins.

I should be glad, if I could persuade him to write such another criticism on any thing of mine; for when he condemns any of my poems, he makes the world have a better opinion of them.
Dryden.

3. To inculcate by argument or expostulation.

PER

To children, afraid of vain images, we persuade confidence by making them handle and look nearer such things.
Taylor.

4. To treat by persuasion. A mode of speech not in use.

Twenty merchants have all persuaded with him; But none can drive him from the envious plea Of forfeiture.
Shakspeare.

PERSUA'DER. n. s. [from persuade.] One who influences by persuasion; an important adviser.

The earl, speaking in that imperious language wherein the king had written, did not irritate the people, but make them conceive, by the haughtiness of delivery of the king's errand, that himself was the author or principal persuader of that counsel.
Bacon.

He soon is mov'd
By such persuaders as are held upright. Daniel.

Hunger and thirst at once,
Pow'rful persuaders! quicken'd at the scent
Of that alluring fruit, urg'd me so keen. Milton.

PERSUA'SIBLE. adj. [persuasibilis, Lat., persuasible, Fr. from persuadeo, Lat.] To be influenced by persuasion.

It makes us apprehend our own interest in that obedience, makes us tractable and persuasible, contrary to that brutish stubbornness of the horse and mule, which the psalmist reproaches.
Government of the Tongue.

PERSUA'SIBLENESS. n. s. [from persuasible.] The quality of being flexible by persuasion.

PERSUA'SION. n. s. [persuasion, Fr. from persuasus, Lat.]

1. The act of persuading; the act of influencing by expostulation; the act of gaining or attempting the passions.

If't prove thy fortune, Polydore, to conquer,
For thou hast all the arts of fine persuasion,
Trust me, and let me know thy love's success.
Otway.

2. The state of being persuaded; opinion.

The most certain token of evident goodness is, if the general persuasion of all men does so account it.
Hooker.

You are abus'd in too bold a persuasion. Shakspeare.
When we have no other certainty of being in the right, but our own persuasions that we are so; this may often be but making one error the gage for another.
Government of the Tongue.

The obedient and the men of practice shall ride upon those clouds, and triumph over their present imperfections; till persuasion pass into knowledge, and knowledge advance into assurance, and all come at length to be completed in the beatific vision.
South.

PERSUA'SIVE. adj. [persuasif, Fr. from persuade.] Having the power of persuading; having influence on the passions.

In prayer, we do not so much respect what precepts-art delivereth, touching the method of persuasive utterance in the presence of great men, as what doth most avail to our own edification in piety and godly zeal.
Hooker.

Let Martius resume his farther discourse, as well for the persuasive as for the consult, touching the means that may conduce unto the enterprize. Bacon.

Notwithstanding the weight and fitness of the arguments to persuade, and the light of man's intellect to meet this persuasive evidence with a suitable assent, no assent followed, nor were men thereby actually persuaded.
South.

PERSUA'SIVELY. adv. [from persuasive.]
In such a manner as to persuade.

The serpent with me
Persuasively hath so prevail'd, that I Have also tasted. Milton.

Many who live upon their estates cannot so much as tell a story, much less speak clearly and persuasively in any business.
Locke.

PERSUA'SIVENESS. n. s. [from persuasive.]
Influence on the passions.

PER

An opinion of the successfulness of the work being as necessary to found a purpose of undertaking it, as either the authority of commands, or the persuasiveness of promises, or pungency of menaces can be.
Hammond.

PERSUA'SORY. adj. [persuasorius, Lat. from persuade.] Having the power to persuade.

Neither is this persuasory. Brown.

PERT. adj. [pert, Welsh; pert, Dutch; appert, French.]

1. Lively; brisk; smart.

Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth;
Turn melancholy forth to funerals. Shakspeare.

On the tawny sands and shelves,
Trip the pert fairies and the dapper elves. Milton.

From pert to stupid sinks supinely down,
In youth a cockcomb, and in age a clown. Spectator.

2. Saucy; petulant; with bold and garrulous loquacity.

All servants might challenge the same liberty, and grow pert upon their masters; and when this sauciness became universal, what less mischief could be expected than an old Scythian rebellion? Collier.

A lady bids me in a very pert manner mind my own affairs, and not pretend to meddle with their linen.
Addison.

Vanessa
Scarce list'ned to their idle chat,
Further than sometimes by a frown,
When they grew pert, to pull them down. Swift.

To PERTAIN. v. n. [pertineo, Latin.] To belong; to relate.

As men hate those that affect that honour by ambition, which pertaineth not to them, so are they more odious, who through fear betray the glory which they have.
Hayward.

A cheveron or raster of an house, a very honourable bearing, is never seen in the coat of a king, because it pertaineth to a mechanical profession.
Peacham.

PERTEREBRA'TION. n. s. [per and terebra, Lat.] The act of boring through.
Ainsworth.

PERTINA'CIOUS. adj. [from pertinax.]

1. Obstinate; stubborn; perversely resolute.

One of the dissenters appeared to Dr. Sanderson to be so bold, so troublesome and illogical in the dispute, as forced him to say, that he had never met with a man of more pertinacious confidence and less abilities.
Walton.

2. Resolute; constant; steady.

Diligence is a steady, constant, and pertinacious study, that naturally leads the soul into the knowledge of that, which at first seemed locked up from it.
South.

PERTINA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from pertinacious.] Obstinate; stubbornly.

They deny that freedom to me, which they pertinaciously challenge to themselves. King Charles.

Others have sought to ease themselves of all the evil of affliction by disputing subtilly against it, and pertinaciously maintaining that afflictions are no real evils, but only in imagination. Tillotson.

Metals pertinaciously resist all transmutation; and though one would think they were turned into a different substance, yet they do but as it were lurk under a vizard.
Ray.

PERTINA'CITY. } n. s. [pertinacia,
PERTINA'CIOUSNESS. } Lat. from pertinacious.]

1. Obstinacy; stubbornness.

In this reply was included a very gross mistake, and if with pertinacity maintained, a capital error.
Brown.

2. Resolution; constancy.

PERTINACY. n. s. [from pertinax, Lat.]

1. Obstinacy; stubbornness; persistency.

Their pertinacy is such, that when you drive them out of one form, they assume another. Duppa.
It holds forth the pertinacy of ill fortune, in pursuing people into their graves. L'Estrange.

P E R

2. Resolution; steadiness; constancy.
St. Gorgonia prayed till she obtained relief.
P E R T I N E N C E. } n. [from pertineo, Lat.]
P E R T I N E N C Y. } Justness of relation to the matter in hand; propriety to the purpose; apposite.

I have shewn the fitness and pertinency of the apostle's discourse to the persons he addressed to, whereby it appeareth that he was no babbler, and did not talk at random.

P E R T I N E N T. adj. [pertinens, Lat. pertinent, French.]

1. Related to the matter in hand; just to the purpose; not useless to the end proposed; apposite; not foreign from the thing intended.

My caution was more pertinent than the rebuke you give it.
I set down, out of experience in business, and conversation in books, what I thought pertinent to this business.

Here I shall seem a little to digress, but you will be by and find it pertinent.
If he could find pertinent treatises of it in books, that would reach all the particulars of a man's behaviour; his own ill-fashioned example would spoil all.

2. Relating; regarding; concerning. In this sense the word now used is pertain-ing.

Men shall have just cause, when any thing pertinent unto faith and religion is doubted of, the more willingly to incline their minds towards that which the sentence of so grave, wise and learned in that faculty shall judge most sound.

Appositely; to the purpose.

Be modest and reserved in the presence of thy betters, speaking little, answering pertinently, not interposing without leave or reason.

P E R T I N E N T N E S S. n. s. [from pertinent.] Appositeness.

P E R T I N E N T. adj. [pertingens, Latin.]
Reaching to; touching.

1. Briskly; smartly.

I find no other difference betwixt the common town-wits and the downright country fools, than that the first are pertly in the wrong, with a little more gaiety; and the last neither in the right nor the wrong.

2. Saucily; petulantly.

Yonder walls, that pertly front your town,
Yond towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet.

When you pertly raise your snout,
Flee, and gibe, and laugh, and flout;
This, among Hibernian asses,
For sheer wit, and humour passes.

P E R T N E S S. n. s. [from pert.]

1. Brisk folly; sauciness; petulance.

Dulness delighted ey'd the lively dunce,
Remembering the herself was pertness once.

2. Petty liveliness; spriteliness without force, dignity, or solidity.

There is in Shaftesbury's works a lively pertness and a parade of literature; but it is hard that we should be bound to admire the reveries.

P E R T R A N S I E N T. adj. [pertransiens, Lat.]
Passing over.

To P E R T U R B. } v. a. [perturbo, Latin.]
To P E R T U R B A T E. }

Rest, rest, perturbed spirit.
His wasting flesh with anguish burns,
And his perturbed soul within him mourns.

2. To disorder; to confuse; to put out of regularity.

They are content to suffer the penalties annexed, rather than perturb the publick peace.

P E R

The inservient and brutal faculties controuled the suggestions of truth; pleasure and profit overwaying the instructions of honesty, and sensuality perturb-ing the reasonable commands of virtue.
The accession or secession of bodies from the earth's surface perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere.

P E R T U R B A T I O N. n. s. [perturbatio, Lat. perturbation, Fr.]

1. Disquiet of mind; deprivation of tranquillity.

Love was not in their looks, either to God,
Nor to each other: but apparent guilt,
And shame, and perturbation, and despair.

The soul, as it is more immediately and strongly affected by this part, so doth it manifest all its passions and perturbations by it.

2. Restlessness of passions.

Natures, that have much heat, and great and violent desires and perturbations, are not ripe for action, till they have passed the meridian of their years.

3. Disturbance; disorder; confusion; commotion.

Although the long dissensions of the two houses had had lucid intervals, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth into new perturbations and calamities.

4. Cause of disquiet.

O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night: sleep with it now,
Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggen bound,
Sleeps out the watch of night.

5. Commotion of passions.

Restore yourselves unto your temper, fathers;
And, without perturbation, hear me speak.

P E R T U R B A T O U R. n. s. [perturbator, Lat. perturbateur, Fr.]
Raiser of commotions.

P E R T U S E D. adj. [pertusus, Lat.]

P E R T U S I O N. n. s. [from pertusus, Lat.]

1. The act of piercing or punching.

The manner of opening a vein in Hippocrates's time, was by stabbing or pertusion, as it is performed in horses.

2. Hole made by punching or piercing.

An empty pot without earth in it, may be put over a fruit the better, if some few pertusions be made in the pot.

To P E R V A D E. v. a. [pervado, Lat.]

1. To pass through an aperture; to permeate.

The labour'd chyle pervades the pores
In all the arterial perforated shores.

Paper dipped in water or oil, the oculus mundi, stone steeped in water, linen-cloth oiled or varnished, and many other substances soaked in such liquors as will intimately pervade their little pores, become by that means more transparent than otherwise.

2. To pass through the whole extension.

Matter, once bereaved of motion, cannot of itself acquire it again, nor till it be struck by some other body from without, or be intrinsically moved by an immaterial self-active substance, that can penetrate and pervade it.

What but God,
Pervades, adjusts and agitates the whole?

P E R V A S I O N. n. s. [from pervade.]
The act of pervading or passing through.

If fusion be made rather by the ingress and trans-cursions of the atoms of fire, than by the bare propagation of that motion, with which fire beats upon the outside of the vessels, that contain the matter to be melted; both those kinds of fluidity, ascribed to salt-petre, will appear to be caused by the pervasion of a foreign body.

1. Distorted from the right.

P E R

And nature breeds
Perverse, all monstrous, all prodigious things.

2. Obstinate in the wrong; stubborn; untractable.

Thou for the testimony of the truth hast born
Universal reproach; far worse to bear
Than violence; for this was all thy care
To stand approv'd in sight of God, though worlds
Judg'd thee perverse.

To so perverse a sex all grace is vain,
It gives them courage to offend again.

3. Petulant; vexatious; peevish; desirous to cross and vex; cross.

O gentle Romeo,
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully,
Or if you think I am too quickly won,
I'll frown and be perverse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt woo: but else not for the world.

P E R V E R S E L Y. adv. [from perverse.]
With intent to vex; peevishly; vexatiously; spitefully; crossly; with petty malignity.

Men perversely take up picques and displeasures at others, and then every opinion of the disliked person must partake of his fate.

Men that do not perversely use their words, or on purpose set themselves to cavil, seldom mistake the signification of the names of simple ideas.

A patriot is a dangerous post,
When wanted by his country most,
Perversely comes in evil times,
Where virtues are imputed crimes.

P E R V E R S E N E S S. n. s. [from perverse.]
1. Petulance; peevishness; spiteful crossness.

Virtue hath some perverseness; for she will Neither believe her good, nor others ill.

Her whom he wishes most, shall seldom gain
Through her perverseness; but shall see her gain'd
By a far worse.

The perverseness of my fate is such,
That he's not mine, because he's mine too much.

When a friend in kindness tries
To shew you where your error lies,
Conviction does but more incense;
Perverseness is your whole defence.

2. Perversion; corruption. Not in use.

Neither can this be meant of evil governors or tyrants; for they are often established as lawful potentates; but of some perverseness and defection in the nation itself.

P E R V E R S I O N. n. s. [perversion, Fr. from perverse.]
The act of perverting; change to something worse.

Women to govern men, slaves freemen, are much in the same degree; all being total violations and perversions of the laws of nature and nations.

He supposes that whole reverend body are so far from disliking popery, that the hopes of enjoying the abby lands would be an effectual incitement to their perversion.

P E R V E R S I T Y. n. s. [perversité, Fr. from perverse.]
Perverseness; crossness.

What strange perversity is this of man!
When 'twas a crime to taste th' lightning tree,
He could not then his hand refrain.

To P E R V E R T. v. a. [pervertio, Lat. pervertir, Fr.]

1. To distort from the true end or purpose.
Instead of good they may work ill, and pervert justice to extreme injustice.

If thou see'st the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of justice in a province, marvel not.

If then his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,
Our labour must be to pervert that end,
And out of good still to find means of evil.
He has perverted my meaning by his glosses; and interpreted my words into blasphemy, of which they were not guilty.

PER

Porphyry has wrote a volume to explain this cave of the nymphs with more piety than judgment; and another person has perverted it into obscenity; and both allegorically. Broome.
We cannot charge any thing upon their nature, till we take care that it is perverted by their education. Law.

2. To corrupt; to turn from the right: opposed to convert, which is to turn from the wrong to the right.

The heinous and despicable act Of Satan, done in Paradise, and how He in the serpent had perverted Eve, Her husband she, to taste the fatal fruit, Was known in heav'n. Milton.

The subtle practices of Eudoxius, bishop of Constantinople, in perverting and corrupting the most pious emperor Valens. Waterland.

PERVERTER. n. f. [from pervert.]

1. One that changes any thing from good to bad; a corrupter.

Where a child finds his own parents his perverters, he cannot be so properly born, as damned into the world. South.

2. One who distorts any thing from the right purpose.

He that reads a prohibition in a divine law, had need be well satisfied about the sense he gives it, lest he incur the wrath of God, and be found a perverter of his law. Stillingfleet.

PERVERTIBLE. adj. [from pervert.] That may be easily perverted. Ainsworth.

PERVICACIOUS. adj. [pervicax, Lat.] Spitefully obstinate; peevishly contumacious.

May private devotions be efficacious upon the mind of one of the most pervicacious young creatures! Clarissa.

Gondibert was in fight audacious, But in his ale most pervicacious. Denham.

PERVICACIOUSLY. adv. [from pervicacious.] With spiteful obstinacy.

PERVICACIOUSNESS. } n. f. [pervicacia, PERVICACITY. } Latin; from PERVICACY. } pervicacious.]

Spiteful obstinacy

PERVIOUS. adj. [pervius, Lat.]

1. Admitting passage; capable of being permeated.

The Egyptians used to say, that unknown darkness is the first principle of the world; by darkness they mean God, whose secrets are pervious to no eye. Taylor.

Leda's twins,
Conspicuous both, and both in act to throw
Their trembling lances brandish'd at the foe,
Nor had they mis'd; but he to thickets fled, Conceal'd from aiming spears, not pervious to the spear. Dryden.

Those lodged in other earth, more lax and pervious, decayed in tract of time, and rotted at length. Woodward.

2. Pervading; permeating. This sense is not proper.

What is this little, agile, pervious fire,
This flutt'ring motion which we call the mind? Prior.

PERVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from pervious.] Quality of admitting a passage.

The perviousness of our receiver to a body much more subtle than air, proceeded partly from the looser texture of that glass the receiver was made of, and partly from the enormous heat, which opened the pores of the glass. Boyle.

There will be found another difference besides that of perviousness. Holder.

PERUKE. n. f. [peruque, Fr.] A cap of false hair; a periwig.

I put him on a linen cap, and his peruke over that. Wifeman.

To PERUKE. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress in adscititious hair.

PERUKE-MAKER. n. f. [peruke and maker.] A maker of perukes; a wigmaker.

PES

PERUSAL. n. f. [from peruse.] The act of reading.

As pieces of miniature must be allowed a closer inspection, so this treatise requires application in the perusal. Woodward.

If upon a new perusal you think it is written in the very spirit of the ancients, it deserves your care, and is capable of being improved. Atterbury.

To PERUSE. v. a. [per and use.]

1. To read.

Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know
The treason. Shakspeare.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you constantly set apart an hour in a day to peruse those petitions. Bacon.

Carefully observe, whether he tastes the distinguishing perfections or the specifick qualities of the author whom he peruses. Addison.

2. To observe; to examine.

I hear the enemy;
Out some light horsemen, and peruse their wings. Shakspeare.

I've perus'd her well;
Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the king. Shakspeare.

Myself I then perus'd, and limb by limb Survey'd. Milton.

PERUSER. n. f. [from peruse.] A reader; examiner.

The difficulties and hesitations of every one will be according to the capacity of each peruser, and as his penetration into nature is greater or less. Woodw.

PESADE. n. f.

Pesade is a motion a horse makes in raising or lifting up his fore-quarters, keeping his hind legs upon the ground without stirring. Farrier's Dict.

PESSARY. n. f. [peffaire, Fr.] An oblong form of medicine, made to thrust up into the uterus upon some extraordinary occasions.

Of cantharides he prescribes five in a peffary, cutting off their heads and feet, mixt with myrrh. Arbuthnot.

PEST. n. f. [peste, French; pestis, Latin.]

1. Plague; pestilence.

Let fierce Achilles
The god propitiate, and the pest assuage. Pope.

2. Any thing mischievous or destructive.

At her words the hellish pest Forbore. Milton.

Of all virtues justice is the best;
Valour without it is a common pest. Waller.

The pest a virgin's face and bosom bears,
High on her crown a rising snake appears,
Guards her black front, and hisses in her hairs. Pope.

To PESTER. v. a. [pester, French.]

1. To disturb; to perplex; to harass; to turmoil.

Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there? Shakspeare.

He hath not fail'd to pester us with message,
Importing the surrender of those lands. Shakspeare.

We are pestered with mice and rats, and to this end the cat is very serviceable. More against Atheism.

A multitude of scribblers daily pester the world with their insufferable stuff. Dryden.

They did so much pester the church and delude the people, that contradictions themselves asserted by rabbies were equally revered by them as the infallible will of God. South.

At home he was pursu'd with noise;
Abroad was pester'd by the boys. Swift.

2. To encumber.

Fitches and pease
For pest'ring too much on a hovel they lay. Tusser.

The people crowding near within the pester'd room. Drayton.

Confin'd and pester'd in this pinfold here,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being. Milton.

PESTERER. n. f. [from pester.] One that pesters or disturbs.

PESTEROUS. adj. [from pester.] Encumbering; cumbersome.

PES

In the statute against vagabonds note the dislike the parliament had of gaoing them, as that which was chargeable, pesterous, and of no open example. Bacon's Henry VII.

PE'STHOUSE. n. f. [from pest and house.] A hospital for persons infected with the plague.

PESTIFEROUS. adj. [from pestifer, Latin.]

1. Destructive; mischievous.

Such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy leud, pestif'rous, and dissentious pranks,
The very infants prattle of thy pride. Shakspeare.
You, that have discover'd secrets, and made such pestiferous reports of men nobly held, must die. Shakspeare.

2. Pestilential; malignant; infectious.

It is easy to conceive how the steams of pestiferous bodies taint the air, while they are alive and hot. Arbuthnot.

PE'STILENCE. n. f. [pestilence, Fr. pestilentia, Lat.] Plague; pest; contagious distemper.

The red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,
And occupations perish. Shakspeare.

When my eyes beheld Olivia first,
Methought she purg'd the air of pestilence. Shakspeare.

PE'STILENT. adj. [pestilent, Fr. pestilens, Latin.]

1. Producing plagues; malignant.

Great ringing of bells in populous cities dissipated pestilent air, which may be from the concussion of the air, and not from the sound. Bacon.

Hoary moulded bread the soldiers thrusting upon their spears railed against king Ferdinand, who with such corrupt and pestilent bread would feed them. Kneller.

To those people that dwell under or near the equator, a perpetual spring would be a most pestilent and insupportable summer. Bentley.

2. Mischievous; destructive.

There is nothing more contagious and pestilent than some kinds of harmony; than some nothing more strong and potent unto good. Hooker.

Which precedent, of pestilent import,
Against thee, Henry, had been brought. Daniel.

The world abounds with pestilent books, written against this doctrine. Swift.

3. In ludicrous language, it is used to exaggerate the meaning of another word.

One pestilent fine,
His beard no bigger though than thine,
Walk'd on before the rest. Suckling.

PESTILENTIAL. adj. [pestilenciel, Fr. pestilens, Latin.]

PESTILLATION. n. f. [pistillum, Latin.] The act of pounding or breaking in a mortar.

The best diamonds are comminable, and so far from breaking hammers, that they submit unto pestillation, and resist not any ordinary pestle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PE'STLE. n. f. [pistillum, Lat.] An instrument with which any thing is broken in a mortar.

What real alteration can the beating of the pestle make in any body, but of the texture of it? Locke.

Upon our vegetable food the teeth and jaws act as the pestle and mortar. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

PESTLE of Pork. n. f. A gammon of bacon. Ainsworth.

P E T

PET. n. f. [This word is of doubtful etymology; from despit, Fr. or impetus, Lat. perhaps it may be derived some way from petit, as it implies only a little fume or fret.]

1. A slight passion; a slight fit of peevishness.

If all the world
Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but freeze,
Th' all-giver would be unthankt, would be unpais'd.
Milton.

If we cannot obtain every vain thing we ask, our next business is to take pet at the refusal. L'Estr.
Life, given for noble purposes, must not be thrown up in a pet, nor whined away in love. Collier.

They cause the proud their visits to delay,
And send the godly in a pet to pray. Pope.

PETAL. n. f. [petalum, Latin.]

Petal is a term in botany, signifying those fine coloured leaves that compose the flowers of all plants: whence plants are distinguished into monopetalous, whose flower is one continued leaf; tripetalous, pentapetalous, and polypetalous, when they consist of three, five, or many leaves. Quincy.

PETALOUS. adj. [from petal.] Having petals.

PETAR. } n. f. [petard, French; petardo, PETARD. } Italian.]

A petard is an engine of metal, almost in the shape of a hat, about seven inches deep, and about five inches over at the mouth; when charged with fine powder well beaten, it is covered with a madrier or plank, bound down fast with ropes, running through handles, which are round the rim near the mouth of it: this petard is applied to gates or barriers of such places as are designed to be surprized, to blow them up: they are also used in countermines to break through into the enemies galleries. Military Dictionary.

'Tis the spot to have the engineer Hoist with his own petard. Shakspeare.
Find all his having and his holding,
Reduc'd t' eternal noise and scolding;
The conjugal petard that tears
Down all portcullises of ears. Hudibras.

PETE'CHIAL. adj. [from petechia, Latin.] Pestilentially spotted.

In London are many fevers with buboes and carbuncles, and many petechial or spotted fevers. Arbutnot.

By what small petit hints does the mind recover a vanishing notion? South.

PETITION. n. f. [petitio, Latin.]

1. Request; intreaty; supplication; prayer.

We must propose unto all men certain petitions incident and very material in causes of this nature. Hooker.

My next poor petition
Is, that his noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women. Shakspeare.
Let my life be given at my petition, and my people at my request. Esther.

Thou didst choose this house to be called by thy name, and to be a house of prayer and petition for thy people. 1 Maccabees.

We must not only send up petitions and thoughts now and then to heaven, but must go through all our worldly business with a heavenly spirit. Law.

2. Single branch or article of a prayer.

Then pray'd that she might still possess his heart,
And no pretending rival share a part;
This last petition heard of all her pray'r. Dryden.

To PETITION. v. a. [from the noun.] To solicit; to supplicate.

You have petition'd all the gods
For my prosperity. Shakspeare.

The mother petitioned her goddess to bestow upon them the greatest gift that could be given. Addison.

PETITIONARILY. adv. [from petitionary.]

By way of begging the question.

This doth but petitionarily infer a dextrality in the heavens, and we may as reasonably conclude a right and left literality in the ark of Noah. Brown.

PETITIONARY. adj. [from petition.]

1. Supplicatory; coming with petitions.

Pardon thy petitionary countrymen. Shakspeare.
It is our bale petitionary breath
That blows 'em to this greatness. Ben Jonson.

PETTCOAT. n. f. [petit and coat.] The lower part of a woman's dress.

What trade art thou, Feeble?—A woman's tailor, sir.—Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat? Shakspeare.

Her feet beneath her petticoat,
Like little mice, stole in and out,
As if they fear'd the light. Suckling.

It is a great compliment to the sex, that the virtues are generally shewn in petticoats. Addison.

To fifty chosen sylphs, of special note,
We trust th' important charge, the petticoat;
Oft have we known that sevenfold fence to fail,
Though stiff with hoops, and arm'd with ribs of whale. Pope.

PETTIFOGGER. n. f. [corrupted from pettivoguer; petit and voguer, Fr.] A petty small-rate lawyer.

The worst conditioned and least cliented pettivoggers get, under the sweet bait of revenge, more plentiful prosecution of actions. Carew.

Your pettifoggers damn their souls
To share with knaves in cheating fools. Hudibras.

Consider, my dear, how indecent it is to abandon your shop and follow pettifoggers; there is hardly a plea between two country esquires about a barren acre, but you draw yourself in as bail, surety, or solicitor. Arbutnot.

Physicians are apt to despise empyrics; lawyers, pettifoggers; and merchants, pedlars. Swift.

PETTINESS. n. f. [from petty.] Smallness; littleness; inconsiderableness; unimportance.

But was a petty servant to the state,
He was your enemy. Shakspeare.

It is a common experience, that dogs know the dog-killer; when, as in time of infection, some petty fellow is sent out to kill the dogs. Bacon.

It importeth not much, some petty alteration or difference it may make. Bacon.

Will God incense his ire
For such a petty trespass? Milton.

From thence a thousand lesser poets sprung,
Like petty princes from the fall of Rome. Denham.

They believe one only chief and great God, which hath been from all eternity; who, when he proposed to make the world, made first other gods of a principal order; and after, the sun, moon, and stars, as petty gods. Stillingfleet.

By all I have read of petty commonwealths, as well as the great ones, it seems to me, that a free people do of themselves divide into three powers. Swift.

Bolonia water'd by the petty Rhine. Addison.

Can an example be given, in the whole course of this war, where we have treated the pettiest prince, with whom we have had to deal, in so contemptuous a manner? Swift.

PETULANCE. } n. f. [petulance, Fr. petulantia, Lat.] Sauciness; peevishness; wantonness.

It was excellently said of that philosopher, that there was a wall or parapet of teeth set in our mouth, to restrain the petulancy of our words. Ben Jonson.

Such was others' petulancy, that they joyed to see their betters shamefully outraged and abused. King C.

Wise men knew, that which looked like pride in some, and like petulance in others, would, by experience in affairs and conversation amongst men, be in time wrought off. Clarendon.

However their numbers, as well as their insolence and perverseness increased, many instances of petulancy and scurrility are to be seen in their pamphlets. Swift.

There appears in our age a pride and petulancy in youth, zealous to cast off the sentiment of their fathers and teachers. Watts.

PETULANT. adj. [petulans, Lat. petulant, French.]

1. Saucy; perverse.

Like a phantasma or a hideous dream. Shakspeare.

This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court
A phantasm, a monarcho, and one that makes sport
To the prince and his book-mates. Shakspeare.

They believe, and they believe amiss, because they be but phantasms or apparitions. Raleigh.

If the great ones were in forwardness, the people were in fury, entertaining this airy body or phantasm- with incredible affection; partly out of their great devotion to the house of York, partly out of proud humour. Bacon.

Why,
In this infernal vale first met, thou call'st
Me father, and that phantasm call'st my son. Milt.

Assaying, by his devilish art, to reach
The organs of her fancy, and with them forge Illusions, as he list, phantasms and dreams. Milt.

PHENIX. n. f. [Φοινίξ; phœnix, Latin.] The bird which is supposed to exist single, and to rise again from its own ashes.

There is one tree, the phenix throne; one phenix At this hour reigning there. Shakspeare.

To all the fowls he seems a phenix. Milton.

Having the idea of a phenix in my mind, the first enquiry is, whether such a thing does exist? Locke.

PHENOMENON. n. f. [Φαινόμενον; phenomene, French: it is therefore often written phænomenon; but being naturalised, it has changed the æ, which is not in the English language, to e. But if it has the original plural termination phænomena, it should, I think, be written with æ.]

1. Appearance: visible quality.

Short-sighted minds are unfit to make philosophers, whose business it is to describe, in comprehensive theories, the phenomena of the world and their causes. Burnet.

These are curiosities of little or no moment to the understanding the phænomenon of nature. Newton.

The most considerable phenomenon, belonging to terrestrial bodies, is gravitation, whereby all bodies in the vicinity of the earth press towards its centre. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Any thing that strikes by any new appearance.

PHIAL. n. f. [phiale, Latin; phiôle, French.] A small bottle.

Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole

With juice of cursed hebenon in a phial. Shaks.

He proves his explications by experiments made with a phial of water, and with globes of glass filled with water. Newton.

PHILANTHROPY. n. f. [Φιλία and ἀνθρωπος.] Love of mankind; good-nature.

Such a transient temporary good nature is not that philanthropy, that love of mankind, which deserves the title of a moral virtue. Addison.

PHILIPPICK. n. f. [from the invectives of Demosthenes against Philip of Macedon.] Any invective declamation.

PHILOLOGER. n. f. [Φιλόλογος.] One whose chief study is language; a grammarian; a critick.

Philologers and critical discourses, who look beyond the shell and obvious exteriors of things, will not be angry with our narrower explorations. Brown.

You expect, that I should discourse of this matter like a naturalist, not a philologer. Boyle.

The best philologers say, that the original word does not only signify domestick, as opposed to foreign, but also private, as opposed to common. Spratt's Sermons.

PHILOLOGICAL. adj. [from philology.]

Critical; grammatical.

Studies, called philological, are history, language, grammar, rhetoric, poesy, and criticism. Watts.

He who pretends to the learned professions, if he doth not arise to be a critick himself in philological matters, should frequently converse with dictionaries, paraphrasts, commentators, or other criticks, which may relieve any difficulties. Watts.

PHILOLOGIST. n. f. See PHILOLOGER. A critick; a grammarian.

PHILOLOGY. n. f. [Φιλολογία; philologie, French.] Criticism; grammatical learning.

Temper all discourses of philology with interpersions of morality. Walker.

PHILOMEL. } n. f. [from Philomela, PHILOMELA. } changed into a bird.]

The nightingale.

Time drives the flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage, and rocks grow cold,
And philomel becometh dumb. Shaks.

PHI

Admires the jay the insects gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk, when philomela sings? Pope.

PHILOMOT. adj. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf.] Coloured like a dead leaf.

One of them was blue, another yellow, and another philomot; the fourth was of a pink colour, and the fifth of a pale green. Addison.

PHILO'SOPHEME. n. f. [Φιλοσόφημα.] Principle of reasoning; theorem. An unusual word.

You will learn how to address yourself to children for their benefit, and derive some useful philosophemes for your own entertainment. Watts.

PHILO'SOPHER. n. f. [philosophus, Latin; philosophe, French.] A man deep in knowledge, either moral or natural.

Many found in belief have been also great philosophers. Hooker.

The philosopher hath long ago told us, that according to the divers natures of things, so must the evidences for them be; and that 'tis an argument of an undisciplined wit not to acknowledge this. Wilkins.

They all our fam'd philosophers defie,
And would our faith by force of reason try. Dryden.

If the philosophers by fire had been so wary in their observations and sincere in their reports, as those, who call themselves philosophers, ought to have been, our acquaintance with the bodies here about us had been yet much greater. Locke.

Adam, in the state of innocence, came into the world a philosopher, which sufficiently appeared by his writing the natures of things upon their names; he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

PHILO'SOPHERS stone. n. f. A stone dreamed of by alchymists, which, by its touch, converts base metals into gold.

That stone

Philosophers in vain so long have sought. Milton.

PHILOSOPHICK. } adj. [philosophique, PHILOSOPHICAL. } French; from philosophy.]

1. Belonging to philosophy; suitable to a philosopher; formed by philosophy.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity:

The stoick last in philosophick pride

By him call'd virtue, and his virtuous man,

Wife, perfect in himself, and all possessing. Milton.

How could our chymick friends go on

To find the philosophick stone? Prior.

When the safety of the publick is endangered, the appearance of a philosophical or affected indolence must arise either from stupidity or perfidiousness. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Skilled in philosophy.

We have our philosophical persons to make modern and familiar things supernatural and causeless. Shakspeare.

Acquaintance with God is not a speculative knowledge, built on abstracted reasonings about his nature and essence, such as philosophical minds often busy themselves in, without reaping from thence any advantage towards regulating their passions, but practical knowledge. Auterbury.

3. Frugal; abstemious.

This is what nature's wants may well suffice:

But since among mankind so few there are,

Who will conform to philosophick fare,

I'll mingle something of our times to please. Dryden.

PHILOSOPHICALLY. adv. [from philosophical.] In a philosophical manner; rationally; wisely.

The law of commonweals that cut off the right hand of malefactors, if philosophically executed, is impartial; otherwise the amputation not equally punisheth all. Brown.

No man has ever treated the passion of love with so much delicacy of thought and of expression, or searched into the nature of it more philosophically than Ovid. Dryden.

If natural laws were once settled, they are never to be reversed; to violate and infringe them, is the same as what we call miracle, and doth not found very philosophically out of the mouth of an atheist. Bentley's Sermons.

PHILO'SOPHIZE. v. a. [from philosophy.] To play the philosopher; to reason like a philosopher; to moralize; to search into nature; to inquire into the causes of effects.

Qualities occult to Aristotle, must be so to us; and we must not philosophize beyond sympathy and antipathy. Glanville.

The wax philosophized upon the matter, and finding out at last that it was burning made the brick so hard, cast itself into the fire. L'Estrange.

Two doctors of the schools were philosophizing upon the advantages of mankind above all other creatures. L'Estrange.

Some of our philosophizing divines have too much exalted the faculties of our souls, when they have maintained, that by their force mankind has been able to find out God. Dryden.

PHILO'SOPHY. n. f. [philosophie, Fr. philosophia, Latin.]

1. Knowledge natural or moral.

I had never read, heard, nor seen any thing, I had never any taste of philosophy nor inward feeling in myself, which for a while I did not call to my succour. Sidney.

Hang up philosophy;

Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom,
It helps not. Shakspeare.

The progress you have made in philosophy, hath enabled you to benefit yourself with what I have written. Digby.

2. Hypothesis or system upon which natural effects are explained.

We shall in vain interpret their words by the notions of our philosophy, and the doctrines in our schools. Locke.

3. Reasoning; argumentation.

Of good and evil much they argu'd then,

Vain wisdom all and false philosophy. Milton.

His decisions are the judgment of his passions not of his reason, the philosophy of the sinner not of the man. Rogers.

4. The course of sciences read in the schools.

PHILTER. n. f. [Φίλτρον; philtre, French.] Something to cause love.

The melting kiss that tips

The jellied philtre of her lips. Cleaveland.

This cup a cure for both our ills has brought,

You need not fear a philter in the draught. Dryden.

A philter that has neither drug nor enchantment in it, love if you would raise love. Addison.

PHILTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To charm to love.

Let not those that have repudiated the more inviting sins, shew themselves philtred and bewitched by this. Gov. of the Tongue.

PHIZ. n. f. [This word is formed by a ridiculous contraction from physiognomy, and should therefore, if it be written at all, be written phyz.] The face, in a sense of contempt.

His air was too proud, and his features amiss, As if being a traitor had alter'd his phiz. Stepney.

PHLEBO'TOMIST. n. f. [phlebotomiste, Fr. from φλέψ and τέμνω.] One that opens a vein; a blood-letter.

PHLEBO'TOMIZE. v. a. [phlebotomiser, French; from phlebotomy.] To let blood.

The frail bodies of men must have an evacuation for their humours, and be phlebotomized. Howel.

PHLEBO'TOMY. n. f. [φλεβοτομία, φλέψ, φλέγω, vena, and τέμνω; phlebotomie, French.] Blood-letting; the act or practice of opening a vein for medical intentions.

Phlebotomy is not cure, but mischief; the blood so flowing as if the body were all vein. Holydays. Although in indispositions of the liver or spleen, considerations are made in phlebotomy to their situation, yet, when the heart is affected, it is thought as effectual to bleed on the right as the left. Brown.

Pains for the spending of the spirits, come nearest to the copious and swift loss of spirits by pblebotomy. Harvey.

PHLEGM. n. f. [φλέγμα; phlegme, Fr.]

1. The watery humour of the body, which, when it predominates, is supposed to produce sluggishness or dulness.

Make the proper use of each extreme, And write with fury, but correct with phlegm. Rose.

He who supreme in judgment, as in wit, Might boldly censure, as he boldly writ, Yet judg'd with coolness, though he sung with fire; His precepts teach but what his works inspire.

Our critics take a contrary extreme, They judge with fury, but they write with phlegm. Pope.

Let melancholy rule supreme, Choler preside, or blood or phlegm, It makes no difference in the case, Nor is complexion honour's place. Swift.

2. Water, among chymists.

A linen cloth, dipped in common spirit of wine, is not burnt by the flame, because the phlegm of the liquor defends the cloth. Boyle.

PHLEGMAGOGUE. n. f. [φλέγμα and αγω; phlegmagogue, French.] A purge of the milder sort, supposed to evacuate phlegm, and leave the other humours.

The pituitous temper of the stomachick ferment must be corrected, and phlegmagogues must evacuate it. Floyer.

PHLEGMA'TICK. adj. [φλεγματικός; phlegmatique, French; from phlegm.]

1. Abounding in phlegm.

The putrid vapours, though exciting a fever, do colligate the phlegmatick humours of the body. Harvey.

Chewing and smoking of tobacco is only proper for phlegmatick people. Arbutnot.

2. Generating phlegm.

A neat's foot, I fear, is too phlegmatick a meat. Shakspeare.

Negroes, transplanted into cold and phlegmatick habitations, continue their hue in themselves and generations. Brown.

3. Watery.

Spirit of wine is inflammable by means of its oily parts, and being distilled often from salt of tartar, grows by every distillation more and more aqueous and phlegmatick. Newton.

4. Dull; cold; frigid.

As the inhabitants are of a heavy phlegmatick temper, if any leading member has more fire than comes to his share, it is quickly tempered by the coldness of the rest. Addison.

Who but a husband ever could persuade His heart to leave the bosom of thy love, For any phlegmatick design of state. Southern.

PHLEGMON. n. f. [φλεγμονή.] An inflammation; a burning tumour.

Phlegmon, or inflammation, is the first degeneration from good blood, and nearest of kin to it. Wiseman.

PHLEGMONOUS. adj. [from phlegmon.] Inflammatory; burning.

It is generated secondarily out of the dregs and remainder of a phlegmonous or oedematick tumour. Harvey.

PHLEME. n. f. [from pblebotomy.] A steam, so it is commonly written; an instrument which is placed on the vein and driven into it with a blow; particularly in bleeding of horses.

PHLOGISTON. n. f. [φλογιστός, from φλέω.]

1. A chymical liquorextremely inflammable.

2. The inflammable part of any body.

PHONICKS. n. f. [from φωνή.] The doctrine of sounds.

PHONOCA'MPTICK. adj. [φωνή and κάμπτω.]

Having the power to infect or turn the sound, and by that to alter it.

VOL. II.

The magnifying the sound by the polyphonisms or repercussions of the rocks, and other phonocampick objects. Derham.

PHOSPHOR. } n. f. [phosphorus, Lat.]

PHOSPHORUS. }

1. The morning star.

Why sit we sad when phosphorus shines so clear? Pope.

2. A chymical substance which, exposed to the air, takes fire.

Phosphorus is obtained by distillation from urine putrified, by the force of a very vehement and long continued fire. Pemberton.

Of lambent flame you have whole sheets in a handful of phosphor. Addison.

Liquid and solid phosphorus show their flames more conspicuously, when exposed to the air. Cheyne.

PHRASE. n. f. [φράσις.]

1. An idiom; a mode of speech peculiar to a language.

2. An expression; a mode of speech.

Now mince the sin,

And mollify damnation with a phrase:

Say you consented not to Sancho's death,

But barely not forbid it. Dryden.

To fear the Lord, and depart from evil, are phrases which the scripture useth to express the sum of religion. Tillotson.

3. Style; expression.

Thou speak'st

In better phrase and matter than thou didst. Shakspeare.

TO PHRASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To style; to call; to term

These suns,

For so they phrase them, by their heralds challenged

The noble spirits to arms. Shakspeare.

PHRASEO'LOGY. n. f. [φράσις and λόγος.]

1. Style; diction.

The scholars of Ireland seem not to have the least conception of a style, but run on in a flat phraseology, often mingled with barbarous terms. Swift.

2. A phrase book.

PHRENE'TICK. } adj. [φρενητικός; phrene-

PHRE'NTICK. } tique, Fr.] Mad; inflamed in the brain; frantick.

Phreneticks imagine they see that without, which their imagination is affected with within. Harvey.

What ætium, what phrenetick mood,

Makes you thus lavish of your blood? Hudibras.

The world was little better than a common fold of phreneticks and bedlams. Woodward.

PHRENI'TIS. n. f. [φρενίτις.] Madness; inflammation of the brain.

It is allowed to prevent a phrenitis. Wiseman.

PHRE'NSY. n. f. [from φρενίτις; phrenesie,

Fr. whence, by contraction, phrensy.]

Madness; frantickness. This is too often written frenzy. See FRENZY.

Many never think on God, but in extremity of fear, and then perplexity not suffering them to be idle, they think and do as it were in a phrensy. Hooker.

Demoniack phrensy, moping melancholy. Milt.

Would they only please themselves in the delusion,

the phrensy were more innocent; but lunaticks will needs be kings. Decay of Piety.

Phrensy or inflammation of the brain, profuse hemorrhages from the nose resolve, and copious bleeding in the temporal arteries. Arbutnot.

PHTHISICAL. adj. [φθισικός; phthisique, Fr.

from phthisick.] Wasting.

Collection of purulent matter in the capacity of the breast, if not suddenly cured, doth undoubtedly impell the patient into a phthisical consumption. Harvey on Consumptions.

PHTHISICK. n. f. [φθίσις; phthisie, Fr.]

A consumption.

His disease was a phthisick or asthma oft incurring to an orthopnea. Harvey on Consumptions.

PHTHISIS. n. f. [φθίσις.] A consumption.

If the lungs be wounded deep, though they escape

the first nine days, yet they terminate in a phthisis

or fistula. Wiseman.

PHILA'CTERY. n. f. [φουλακτήριον; phylacter,

Fr.] A bandage on which was inscribed some memorable sentence.

The phylacteries on their wrists and foreheads were looked on as spells, which would yield them impunity for their disobedience. Hammond.

Golden sayings,

On large phylacteries expressive writ,

Were to the foreheads of the Rabbins ty'd. Prior

PHY'SICAL. adj. [physique, Fr. from physick.]

1. Relating to nature or to natural philosophy; not moral.

The physical notion of necessity, that without which the work cannot possibly be done; it cannot be affirmed of all the articles of the creed, that they are thus necessary. Hammond.

I call that physical certainty which doth depend upon the evidence of sense, which is the first and highest kind of evidence of which human nature is capable. Wilkins.

To reflect on those innumerable secrets of nature and physical philosophy, which Homer wrought in his allegories, what a new scene of wonder may this afford us! Pope.

Charity in its origin is a physical and necessary consequence of the principle of re-union. Cheyne.

2. Pertaining to the science of healing; as,

a physical treatise, physical herbs.

3. Medicinal; helpful to health.

Is Brutus sick? and is it physical

To walk unbraced, and suck up the humours

Of the dank morning? Shakspeare.

The blood I drop is rather physical

Than dangerous to me. Shakspeare.

4. Resembling physick: as, a physical taste.

PHY'SICALLY. adv. [from physical.]

1. According to nature; by natural operation; in the way or sense of natural philosophy; not morally.

Time measuring out their motion, informs us of the periods and terms of their duration, rather than effecteth or physically produceth the same. Brown.

The outward act of worship may be considered physically and abstractly from any law, and so it depends upon the nature of the intention, and morally,

as good or evil: and so it receives its denomination

from the law. Stillington.

Though the act of the will commanding, and the act of any other faculty, executing that which is so commanded, be physically and in the precise nature of things distinct, yet morally as they proceed from one entire, free, moral agent, may pass for one and the same action. South's Sermons.

I do not say, that the nature of light consists in small round globules, for I am not now treating physically of light or colours. Locke.

2. According to the science of medicine;

according to the rules of medicine.

He that lives physically, must live miserably. Cheyne.

PHYSICIAN. n. f. [physicien, Fr. from phy- sick.] One who professes the art of healing.

Trust not the physician,

His antidotes are poison, and he slays

More than you rob. Shakspeare.

Some physicians are so conformable to the humour of the patient, as they press not the true cure of the disease; and others are so regular, as they respect not sufficiently the condition of the patient. Bacon.

His gratulatory verse to king Henry is not more witty than the epigram upon the name of Nicolaus, an ignorant physician, who had been the death of thousands. Peacham of Poetry.

Taught by thy art divine, the sage physician

Eludes the urn; and chains, or exiles death. Prior.

PHY'SICK. n. f. [φυσική, which originally signifying natural philosophy, has been transferred in many modern languages to medicine.]

1. The science of healing.

Were it my business to understand physick, would not the safer way be to consult nature herself in the history of diseases and their cures, than espouse

the principles of the dogmatists, methodists, or chymists? Locke.

2. Medicines; remedies.

In itself we desire health, physick only for health's sake. Hooker.

Use physick or ever thou be sick. Ecclesiasticus.
Prayer is the best physick for many melancholy diseases. Peacham.

He 'scapes the best, who nature to repair
Draws physick from the fields in draughts of vital air. Dryden.

As all seasons are not proper for physick, so all times are not fit for purging the body politic. Davenant.

3. [In common phrase.] A purge.

The people use physick to purge themselves of humours. Abbot.

To PHY'SICK, v. a. [from the noun.] To purge; to treat with physick; to cure.

The labour we delight in physicks pain. Shaksp.
It is a gallant child; one that indeed physicks the subject, makes old hearts fresh. Shakspere.

Give him allowance as the worthier man;
For that will physick the great myrmidon
Who broils in loud applause. Shakspere.

In virtue and in health we love to be instructed,
as well as physicked with pleasure. L'Estrange.

PHYSICO'THEOLOGY, n. s. [from physico and theology.] Divinity enforced or illustrated by natural philosophy.

PHYSIO'GNOMER, n. s. [physionomiste, Fr.]

PHYSIO'GNOMIST, n. s. [Fr. from physiognomy.] One who judges of the temper or future fortune by the features of the face.

Dionysius, when he should have been put to death by the Turk, a physiognomer wished he might not die, because he would sow much dissention among the Christians. Peacham.

Apelles made his pictures so very like, that a physiognomist and fortune-teller foretold, by looking on them, the time of their deaths whom those pictures represented. Dryden.

Let the physiognomists examine his features. Arbutnot and Pope.

PHYSIOGNO'MICK, adj. [φυσιογνωμονικος; from physiognomy.]

PHYSIOGNO'MONICK, adj. [φυσιογνωμονικος; from physiognomy.] Drawn from the contemplation of the face; conversant in contemplation of the face.

PHYSIO'GNOMY, n. s. [from physiognomy; φυσιογνωμονια; physiognomie, Fr.]

1. The act of discovering the temper, and foreknowing the fortune, by the features of the face.

In all physiognomy, the lineaments of the body will discover those natural inclinations of the mind which dissimulation will conceal, or discipline will suppress. Bacon's Natural History.

2. The face; the cast of the look.

The astrologer, who spells the stars,
Mistakes his globes, and in her brighter eye
Interprets heaven's physiognomy. Cleaveland.

They'll find i' the physiognomies
O' th' planets all men's destinies. Hudibras.

The end of portraits consists in expressing the true temper of those persons which it represents, and to make known their physiognomy. Dryden.

The distinguishing characters of the face, and the lineaments of the body, grow more plain and visible with time and age; but the peculiar physiognomy of the mind is most discernible in children. Locke.

PHYSIOLOGICAL, adj. [from physiology.]

Relating to the doctrine of the natural constitution of things.

Some of them seem rather metaphysical than physiological notions. Boyle.

PHYSIOLOGIST, n. s. [from physiology.]

One versed in physiology; a writer of natural philosophy.

PHYSIO'LOGY, n. s. [φύσις and λόγος; physiologie, Fr.] The doctrine of the constitution of the works of nature, Disputing physiology is of no accommodation to your designs. Glanville.

Philosophers adapted their description of the deity to the vulgar, otherwise the conceptions of mankind could not be accounted for from their physiology. Bentley.

PHY'SY, n. s. I suppose the same with fusee. See FUSEE.

Some watches are made with four wheels, some have strings and physies, and others none. Locke.

PHYTI'VOROUS, adj. [φυτον and voros, Lat.] That eats grass or any vegetable.

Hairy animals, with only two large foreteeth, are all phyti vorus, and called the hare-kind. Ray.

PHYTO'GRAPHY, n. s. [φυτον and γραφω.] A description of plants.

PHY'TOLOGY, n. s. [φυτον and λόγος.] The doctrine of plants; botanical discourse.

PI'ACLE, n. s. [piaculum, Lat.] An enormous crime. Not used.

To tear the paps that gave them suck, can there be a greater piacle against nature, can there be a more execrable and horrid thing? Howel.

PIA'CLAR, adj. [piacularis, from piaculum, Latin.]

PIA'CULOUS, adj. [piaculum, Latin.]

1. Expiatory; having the power to atone.

2. Such as requires expiation.

It was piaculous unto the Romans to pare their nails upon the nundinae, observed every ninth day. Brown.

3. Criminal; atrociously bad.

While we think it so piaculous to go beyond the ancients, we must necessarily come short of genuine antiquity and truth. Glanville.

PIA-MATER, n. s. [Lat.] A thin and delicate membrane, which lies under the dura mater, and covers immediately the substance of the brain.

PI'ANET, n. s. [picus varius.]

He stood under the piazza. Arbutnot and Pope.

PI'CA, n. s. Among printers, a particular size of their types or letters. It is probably so called from having been first used among us in printing the pie, an old book of liturgy.

PICARO'ON, n. s. [from picare, Italian.] A robber; a plunderer.

Corfica and Majorca in all wars have been the nests of picaroons. Temple.

PI'CCAGE, n. s. [piccagium, low Latin.] Money paid at fairs for breaking ground for booths. Ainsworth.

To PICK, v. a. [picken, Dutch.]

1. To cull; to choose; to select; to glean; to gather here and there. It has commonly out after it when it implies selection, and up when it means casual occurrence.

This fellow picks up wit as pigeons peas. Shaksp.

He hath pick'd out an act,
Under whose heavy sense your brother's life Falls into forfeit. Shakspere.

Trust me, sweet,
Out of this silence yet I pick'd a welcome;
And in the modesty of fearful duty
I read as much, as from the rattling tongue
Of saucy and audacious eloquence. Shakspere.

Contempt putteth an edge upon anger more than the hurt itself; and when men are ingenious in picking out circumstances of contempt, they do kindle their anger much. Bacon.

The want of many things fed him with hope, that he should out of these his enemies distressed pick some fit occasion of advantage. Knolles.

They must pick me out with shackles tir'd,
To make them sport with blind activity. Milton.

What made thee pick and chuse her out,
T' employ their forceries about? Hudibras.

How many examples have we seen of men that have been picked up and relieved out of starving necessities, afterwards conspire against their patrons? L'Estrange.

If he would compound for half, it should go hard but he'd make a shift to pick it up. L'Estrange.

A painter would not be much commended, who should pick out this cavern from the whole Aeneids; he had better leave them in their obscurity. Dryden.

Imitate the bees, who pick from every flower that which they find most proper to make honey. Dryden.

He that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak in the wood, has appropriated them to himself. Locke.

He asked his friends about him, where they had picked up such a blockhead. Speſiator.

The will may pick and chuse among these objects, but it cannot create any to work on. Cheyne.

Deep through a miry lane she pick'd her way,
Above her ankle rose the chalky clay. Gay.

Thus much he may be able to pick out, and willing to transfer into his new history; but the rest of your character will probably be dropped on account of the antiquated stile they are delivered in. Swift.

Urban; wherein Mary Magdalen is pietur'd before our Saviour washing his feet on her knees, which will not consist with the strict letter of the text. Brown.

Love is like the painter, who, being to draw the picture of a friend having a blemish in one eye, would picture only the other side of his face. South.

2. To represent.

All filled with these rueful spectacles of so many wretched carcasses starving, that even I, that do but hear it from you, and do picture it in my mind, do greatly pity it. Spenser.

Fond man,
See here thy pietur'd life. Thomson.

To PIDDLE. v. n. [This word is obscure in its etymology; Skinner derives it from picciolo, Italian; or petit, French, little; Lye thinks the diminutive of the Welsh breyta, to eat; perhaps it comes from peddle, for Skinner gives, for its primitive signification, to deal in little things.]

1. To pick at table; to feed squeamishly, and without appetite.

From stomach sharp, and hearty feeding,
To piddle like a lady breeding. Swift.

2. To trifle; to attend to small parts rather her in embracing, as if she would pin her to her heart. Shakspeare.

If removing my consideration from the impression of the cubes to the cubes themselves, I shall pin this one notion upon every one of them, and accordingly conceive it to be really in them; it will fall out, that I allow existence to other entities, which never had any. Digby.
I've learn'd how far I'm to believe
Your pinning oaths upon your sleeve. Hudibras.
They help to cozen themselves, by chusing to pin their faith on such expositors as explain the sacred scripture, in favour of those opinions that they beforehand have voted orthodox. Locke.
It cannot be imagined, that so able a man should take so much pains to pin so closely on his friend a story which, if he himself thought incredible, he could not but also think ridiculous. Locke.
4. [pindan, Saxon.] To shut up; to enclose; to confine, as in pinfold. This written like to pen.
If all this be willingly granted by us, which are saves himself. L'Estrange.

When the respondent is pinched with a strong objection, and is at a loss for an answer, the moderator suggests some answer to the objection of the opponent. Watts.
 9. To try thoroughly; to force out what is contained within.
This is the way to pinch the question; therefore, let what will come of it, I will stand the test of your method. Collier.
- To PINCH. v. n.
1. To act with force, so as to be felt; to bear hard upon; to be puzzling.
A difficulty pincheth, nor will it easily be resolved. Glanville.
But thou
Know'st with an equal hand to hold the scale,
See'st where the reasons pinch, and where they fail. Dryden.
 2. To spare; to be frugal.
There is that waxeth rich by his wariness, and pinching. Ecclesiasticus.
The poor that scarce have wherewithal to eat,
Will pinch and make the singing boy a treat. Dryden.
The bounteous player outgave the pinching lord. Dryden.
- PINCH. n. f. [pinçon, French, from the verb.]
1. A painful squeeze with the fingers.
If any straggler from his rank be found,
A pinch must for the mortal sin compound. Dryden.
 2. A gripe; a pain given.
There cannot be a pinch in death
More sharp than this is. Shakspeare.
 3. Oppression; distress inflicted.
Return to her: no, rather I chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl, Necessity's sharp pinch. Shakspeare.
A farmer was put to such a pinch in a hard winter, that he was forced to feed his family upon the main stock. L'Estrange.
 4. Difficulty; time of distress.
A good sure friend is a better help at a pinch, than all the stratagems of a man's own wit. Bacon.
The devil helps his servants for a season; but

P I N

- when they come once to a pinch, he leaves 'em in the lurch. L'Estrange.
The commentators never fail him at a pinch, and must excuse him. Dryden.
They at a pinch can bribe a vote. Swift.
5. In all the senses except the first, it is used only in low language.
- PINCHFIST. } n. f. [pinch, fist, and PINCHPENNY. } penny.] A miser. Ainsworth.
- PINCUSHION. n. f. [pin and cushion.]
A small bag stuffed with bran or wool on which pins are stuck.
She would ruin me in silks, were not the quantity, that goes to a large pincushion, sufficient to make her a gown and petticoat. Addison.
Thou art a retailer of phrases, and dost deal in remnants of remnants, like a maker of pincushions. Congreve.
- PINDUST. n. f. [pin and dust.] Small particles of metal made by pointing pins.
The little parts of pindust, when mingled with sand, cannot, by their mingling, make it lighter. Digby.
- PINE. n. f. [pinus, Latin; pin, French.]
The pine-tree hath amentaceous flowers, or katkins, which are produced, at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the seeds are produced in squamous cones: to which should be added, that the leaves are longer than those of a fir-tree, and are produced by pairs out of each sheath. Miller.
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven. Shakspeare.
Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays;
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her younger days. Shakspeare.
- To PINE. v. a. [pinian, Sax. pijnen, Dutch.]
1. To languish; to wear away with any kind of misery.
My hungry eyes, through greedy covetise,
With no contentment can themselves suffice;
But having, pine, and having not, complain. Spenser.
I burn, I pine, I perish,
If I achieve not this young modest girl. Shakspeare.
Since my young lady's going into France, the fool hath much pin'd away. Shakspeare.
See, see the pinning malady of France;
Behold the most unnat'ral wounds,
Which thou thyself hast giv'n her woful breast. Shakspeare.
Ye shall not mourn, but pine away for your ini-quities. Ezekiel.
The wicked with anxiety of mind
Shall pine away; in sighs consume their breath. Sandys.
To me who with eternal famine pine,
Alike is hell, or paradise, or heav'n. Milton.
Farewel the year, which threaten'd so
The fairest light the world can show;
Welcome the new, whose ev'ry day,
Restoring what was snatch'd away
By pinning sickness from the fair,
That matchless beauty does repair. Waller.
This night shall see the gaudy wreath decline,
The roses wither, and the lilies pine. Tickel.
 2. To languish with desire.
We may again
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives,
Do faithful homage and receive free honours:
All which we pine for. Shakspeare.
We stood amaz'd to see your mistress mourn,
Unknowing that she pin'd for your return. Dryden.
Your new commander need not pine for action. Philips.
- To PINE. v. a.
1. To wear out; to make to languish.
Part us; I towards the north,
Where shivering cold and sickness *pin*es the clime. Shakspeare.
Look rather on my pale cheek pin'd;
There view your beauties; there you'll find
A fair face, but a cruel mind. Carew.
Bereav'd pin'd with pain,
Her age and anguish from these rites detain. Dryden.

P I N

- Thus tender Spencer liv'd, with mean repast
Content, depress'd with penury, and pin'd
In foreign realm: yet not debas'd his verse. Philips.
2. To grieve for; to bemoan in silence.
Abash'd the devil stood,
Virtue in her shape how lovely, saw; and pin'd
His loss. Milton.
- PINEAPPLE. n. f. The ananà, named for its resemblance to the cone of pines.
The pineapple hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided into three parts, and is funnel-shaped: the embryos are produced in the tubercles: these become a fleshy fruit full of juice: the seeds, which are lodged in the tubercles, are very small and almost kidney-shaped. Miller.
Try if any words can give the taste of a pine-apple, and make one have the true idea of its relish. Locke.
If a child were kept where he never saw but black and white, he would have no more ideas of scarlet, than he that never tasted a pineapple, has of that particular relish. Locke.
- PINEAL. adj. [pincale, Fr.] Resembling a pineapple. An epithet given by Des Cartes, from the form, to the gland which he imagined the seat of the soul.
Courtiers and spaniels exactly resemble one another in the pineal gland. Arbutnot and Pope.
- PINFATHERED. adj. [pin and feather.] Not fledged; having the feathers yet only beginning to shoot.
We see some raw pinfeather'd thing
Attempt to mount, and fights and heroes sing;
Who for false quantities was whipt at school. Dryden.
- PINFOLD. n. f. [pinban, Saxon, to shut up, and fold.] A place in which beasts are confined.
The Irish never come to those raths but armed; which the English nothing suspecting, are taken at an advantage, like sheep in the pinfold. Spenser.
I care not for thee.—
—If I had thee in Lipsbury pinfold, I would make thee care for me. Shakspeare.
Confin'd and pester'd in this pinfold here,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being. Milton.
Oaths were not purpos'd more than law
To keep the good and just in awe,
But to confine the bad and sinful,
Like moral cattle in a pinfold. Hudibras.
- PINGLE. n. f. A small close; an enclosure. Ainsworth.
- PINGUID. adj. [pinguis, Latin.] Fat; unctuous. Little used.
Some clays are more pinguid, and other more slippery; yet all are very tenacious of water on the surface. Mortimer.
- PINHOLE. n. f. [pin and hole.] A small hole, such as is made by the perforation of a pin.
The breast at first broke in a small pinhole. Wiseman.
- PINION. n. f. [pignon, French.]
1. The joint of the wing remotest from the body.
 2. Shakspeare seems to use it for a feather or quill of the wing.
He is pluckt, when hither
He sends so poor a pinion of his wing. Shakspeare.
 3. Wing.
How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The flitting skies, like flying pursuivant. Spenser.
The God, who mounts the winged winds,
Fast to his feet the golden pinions binds,
That high through fields of air his flight sustain. Pope.
Though fear should lend him pinions like the wind,
Yet swifter fate will seize him from behind. Swift.
 4. The tooth of a smaller wheel, answering to that of a larger.
 5. Fetters or bonds for the arms. Ainsworth.
- To PINION. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To bind the wings.

P I N

Whereas they have sacrificed to themselves, they become sacrifices to the inconstancy of fortune, whose wings they thought by their self-wisdom to have pinioned. Bacon.

2. To confine by binding the wings; to maim by cutting off the first joint of the wing.

3. To bind the arm to the body.

A second spear sent with equal force,
His right arm pierc'd, and holding on, bereft
His use of both, and pinion'd down his left. Dryden.

4. To confine by binding the elbows to the sides.

Swarming at his back the country cry'd,
And seiz'd and pinion'd brought to court the knight. Dryden.

5. To shackle; to bind.

Know, that I will not wait pinion'd at your master's court; rather make my country's high pyramids my gibbet, and hang me up in chains. Shakspeare.

You are not to go loose any longer, you must be pinion'd. Shakspeare.

O loose this frame, this knot of man untie!
That my free soul may use her wing,
Which now is pinion'd with mortality,
As an entangled, hamper'd thing. Herbert.

In vain from chains and fetters free,
The great man boasts of liberty;
He's pinion'd up by formal rules of state. Norris.

6. To bind to. This is not proper.

So by each bard an alderman shall sit,
A heavy load shall hang at ev'ry wit;
And while on fame's triumphant car they ride,
Some slave of mine be pinion'd to their side. Pope.

PINK. n. f. [pince, French; from pink, Dutch, an eye; whence the French word œillet; caryophyllum, Latin.]

1. A small fragrant flower of the gilliflower kind.

In May and June come pinks of all sorts; especially the blush pink. Bacon.

2. An eye; commonly a small eye: as, pink-eyed.

Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plump Bacchus, with pink eyne,
In thy vats our cares be drown'd. Shakspeare.

3. Any thing supremely excellent. I know not whether from the flower or the eye, or a corruption of pinacle.

I am the very pink of courtesy. Shakspeare.
Then let Crispino, who was ne'er refus'd
The justice yet of being well abus'd,
With patience wait; and be content to reign
The pink of puppies in some future strain. Young.

4. A colour used by painters.

Pink is very susceptible of the other colours by the mixture; if you mix brown-red with it, you will make it a very earthy colour. Dryden.

5. [pinque, Fr.] A kind of heavy narrow-sterned ship.

This pink is one of Cupid's carriers;
Give fire, she is my prize. Shakspeare.

6. A fish; the minnow. Ainsworth.

TO PINK. v. a. [from pink, Dut. an eye.] To work in eyelet holes; to pierce in small holes.

A haberdasher's wife of small wit rail'd upon me,
till her pink'd porringer fell off her head. Shakspeare.
The sea-hedgehog is inclosed in a round shell, handsomely wrought and pink'd. Carew.

Happy the climate, where the beau
Wears the same suit for use and show;
And at a small expence your wife,
If once well pink'd, is cloath'd for life. Prior.

TO PINK. v. n. [pincken, Dutch; from the noun.] To wink with the eyes.

A hungry fox lay winking and pinking, as if he had sore eyes. L'Estrange.

PINMAKER. n. f. [pin and maker.] He who makes pins.

PINMONEY. n. f. [pin and money.] Money

VOL. II.

P I O

The woman must find out something else to mortgage, when her pinmoney is gone. Addison.

PINNACE. n. f. [pinasse, Fr. pinnacia, Ital. pinaga, Span.] A boat belonging to a ship of war. It seems formerly to have signified rather a small sloop or bark attending a larger ship.

Whilst our pinnace anchors in the downs,
Here shall they make their ransom on the sand. Shakspeare.

For fear of the Turks great fleet, he came by night in a small pinnace to Rhodes. Knolles.

He cut down wood, and made a pinnace, and entered the South-sea. Heylin.

I sent a pinnace or post of advice, to make a discovery of the coast, before I adventured my greater ship. Spelman.

Thus to ballast love,
I saw I had love's pinnace overfraught. Donne.

I discharged a bark, taken by one of my pinnaces, coming from cape Blanch. Raleigh.

A pinnace anchors in a craggy bay.
Swift as a swallow sweeps the liquid way,
The winged pinnace shot along the sea. Pope.

PINNACLE. n. f. [pinnacle, Fr. pinna, Lat.]

1. A turret or elevation above the rest of the building.

My letting some men go up to the pinnacle of the temple, was a temptation to them to cast me down headlong. King Charles.

He who desires only heaven, laughs at that enchantment, which engages men to climb a tottering pinnacle, where the standing is uneasy, and the fall deadly. Decay of Piety.

He took up ship-money where Noy left it, and, being a judge, carried it up to that pinnacle, from whence he almost broke his neck. Clarendon.

Some metropolis
With glist'ring spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milton.

2. A high spiring point.

The slipp'ry tops of human state,
The gilded pinnacles of fate. Cowley.

PINNER. n. f. [from pinna, or pinion.]

1. The lappet of a head which flies loose.

Her goodly countenance I've seen,
Set off with kerchief starch'd, and pinners clean. Gay.

An antiquary will scorn to mention a pinner or a night-rail, but will talk on the vitta. Addison.

2. A pinmaker. Ainsworth.

PINNOCK. n. f. [curruca.] The tomtit. Ainsworth.

PINT. n. f. [pint, Sax. pinte, Fr. pinta, low Lat.] Half a quart; in medicine, twelve ounces; a liquid measure.

Well, you'll not believe me generous, till I crack half a pint with you at my own charges. Dryden.

PINULES. n. f. In astronomy, the fights of an astrolabe. Dia.

PIONEER. n. f. [pionier, from pion, obsolete French: pion, according to Scaliger, comes from peo for pedito, a foot soldier, who was formerly employed in digging for the army. A pioneer is in Dutch, spagenier, from spage, a spade; whence Junius imagines that the French borrowed pagenier, which was afterward called pioneer.] One whose business is to level the road, throw up works, or sink mines in military operations.

Well said, old mole, can't work i' th' ground so fast?
A worthy pioneer. Shakspeare.

Three try new experiments, such as themselves think good; these we call pioneers or miners. Bacon.

His pioneers
Even the paths, and make the highways plain. Fairfax.

Of labouring pioneers
A multitude with spades and axes arm'd,
To lay hills plain, fell woods or vallies fill. Milton.

The Romans, after the death of Tiberius, sent thither an army of pioneers to demolish the buildings, and deface the beauties of the island. Addison.

P I P

PIONING. n. f. Works of pioneers. Spenser.

PIONY. n. f. [pæonia, Latin.] A large flower. See PEONY.

PIOUS. adj. [pious, Latin; pieux, French.]

1. Careful of the duties owed by created beings to God; godly; religious; such as is due to sacred things.

Pious awe that fear'd to have offended. Milton.
Learn

True patience, and to temper joy with fear
And pious sorrow. Milton.

2. Careful of the duties of near relation.

As he is not called a just father, that educates his children well, but pious; so that prince, who defends and well rules his people, is religious. Taylor.

Where was the martial brother's pious care?
Condemn'd perhaps some foreign shore to tread. Pope.

3. Practised under the appearance of religion.

I shall never gratify spightfulness with any sinister thoughts of all whom pious frauds have seduced. King Charles.

PIOUSLY. adv. [from pious.] In a pious manner; religiously; with such regard as is due to sacred things.

The prime act and evidence of the christian hope is, to set industriously and piously to the performance of that condition, on which the promise is made. Hammond.

See lion-hearted Richard, with his force
Drawn from the North, to Jury's hallow'd plains; Piously valiant. Philips.

This martial present piously design'd,
The loyal city give their best lov'd king. Dryden.

Let freedom never perish in your hands!
But piously transmit it to your children. Addison.

PIP. n. f. [pippe, Dut. pepie, Fr. deduced by Skinner from pituita; but probably coming from pipio or pipilo, on account of the complaining cry.]

1. A defluxion with which fowls are troubled; a horny pellicle that grows on the tip of their tongues.

When murrain reigns in hogs or sheep,
And chickens languish of the pip. Hudibras.

A spiteful vexatious giply died of the pip. L'Estr.

2. A spot on the cards. I know not from what original, unless from piet, painting; in the country, the pictured or court cards are called piets.

When our women fill their imaginations with pip and counters, I cannot wonder at a new-born child, that was marked with the five of clubs. Addison.

TO PIP. v. a. [pipio, Lat.] To chirp or cry as a bird.

It is no unfrequent thing to hear the chick pip and cry in the egg, before the shell be broken. Boyle.

PIPE. n. f. [pib, Welsh; pipe, Saxon.]

1. Any long hollow body; a tube.

The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We powt upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we've stuff'd
These pipes, and these conveyances of blood
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls. Shakspeare.

The part of the pipe, which was lowermost, will become higher; so that water ascends by descending. Wilkins.

It has many springs breaking out of the sides of the hills, and vast quantities of wood to make pipes of. Addison.

An animal, the nearer it is to its original, the more pipes it hath, and as it advanceth in age, still fewer. Arbutnot.

2. A tube of clay through which the fume of tobacco is drawn into the mouth.

Try the taking of fumes by pipes, as in tobacco and other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.

PIP

- His ancient pipe in fable dy'd,
And half unsmoak'd lay by his side. Swift.
My husband's a sot,
With his pipe and his pot. Swift.
3. An instrument of wind musick.
I have known, when there was no musick with him but the drum and the fife, and now had he rather hear the taber and the pipe. Shakspeare.
The solemn pipe and dulcimer. Milton.
Then the shrill sound of a small rural pipe,
Was entertainment for the infant stage. Roscommon.
There is no reason, why the sound of a pipe should leave traces in their brains. Locke.
4. The organs of voice and respiration:
as, the wind-pipe.
The exercise of singing openeth the breast and pipes.
Peacbam.
5. The key or sound of the voice.
My throat of war be turn'd,
Which quired with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch. Shakspeare.
6. An office of the exchequer.
That office of her majesty's exchequer, we, by a metaphor, call the pipe, because the whole receipt is finally convey'd into it by the means of divers small pipes or quills, as water into a cistern. Bacon.
7. [peep, Dut. pipe, Fr.] A liquid measure containing two hogheads.
I think I shall drink in pipe wine with Falstaff;
I'll make him dance. Shakspeare.
- To PIPE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To play on the pipe.
Merry Michael the Cornish poet pip'd thus upon his oaten pipe for merry England. Camden.
We have pip'd unto you, and you have not danced.
Matthew.
In singing, as in pip'ing, you excel.
Gaming goats, and fleecy flocks,
And lowing herds, and pip'ing swains,
Come dancing to me. Swift.
2. To have a shrill sound.
His big manly voice,
Turning again toward childish treble, pip'd
And whistles in his sound. Shakspeare.
- PI'PER. n. s. [from pipe.] One who plays on the pipe.
Pipers and trumpeters shall be heard no more in thee. Revelations.
- PI'PETREE. n. s. The lilach.
- PI'PING. adj. [from pipe.] This word is only used in low language.
1. Weak; feeble; sickly: from the weak voice of the sick.
I, in this weak pip'ing time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun. Shakspeare.
2. Hot; boiling: from the sound of any thing that boils.
- PI'PKIN. n. s. [diminutive of pipe, a large vessel.] A small earthen boiler.
A pipkin there like Homer's tripod walks. Pope.
Some officer might give consent
To a large cover'd pipkin in his tent. King.
- PI'PPIN. n. s. [puppyngbe, Dut. Skinner.]
A sharp apple.
Pippins take their name from the small spots or pips that usually appear on the sides of them: some are called stone pippins from their obdurateness; some Kentish pippins, because they agree well with that soil; others French pippins, having their original from France, which is the best bearer of any of these pippins; the Holland pippin and the russet pippin, from its russet hue; but such as are distinguished by the names of grey and white pippins are of equal goodness: they are generally a very pleasant fruit and of good juice, but slender bearers. Mortimer.
You shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour,
we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting.
Shakspeare.
Entertain yourself with a pippin roasted. Harvey.
The pippin-woman, I look upon as fabulous.
Addison.
His foaming tusks let some large pippin grace,
Or 'midst those thund'ring spears an orange place.
King.

PIR

- This pipkin shall another trial make;
See from the core two kernels brown I take. Gay.
- PI'QUANCY. n. s. [from piquant.] Sharpness; tartness.
- PI'QUANT. adj. [piquant, French.]
1. Pricking; piercing; stimulating to the taste.
There are vast mountains of a transparent rock extremely solid, and as piquant to the tongue as salt.
Addison on Italy.
2. Sharp; tart; pungent; severe.
Some think their wits asleep, except they dart out somewhat that is piquant, and to the quick: that is a vein that would be bridled; and men ought to find the difference between saltiness and bitterness. Bacon.
Men make their raileries as piquant as they can to wound the deeper. Government of the Tongue.
- PI'QUANTLY. adv. [from piquant.] Sharply;
tartly.
A small mistake may leave upon the mind the lasting memory of having been piquantly, though wittily taunted. Locke.
- PIQUE. n. s. [pique, French.]
1. An ill will; an offence taken; petty malevolence.
He had never any the least pique, difference or jealousy with the king his father. Bacon.
Men take up piques and displeasures at others, and then every opinion of the disliked person must partake of his fate. Decay of Piety.
Out of a personal pique to those in service, he stands as a looker on, when the government is attacked. Addison.
2. A strong passion.
Though he have the pique, and long,
'Tis still for something in the wrong;
As women long, when they're with child,
For things extravagant and wild. Hudibras.
3. Point; nicety; punctilio.
Add long prescription of establish'd laws,
And pique of honour to maintain a cause,
And shame of change. Dryden.
- To PIQUE. v. a. [piquer, French.]
1. To touch with envy or virulency; to put into fret; to kindle to emulation.
Piqu'd by Protogenes's fame,
From Co to Rhodes Apelles came,
To see a rival and a friend,
Prepar'd to censure or commend. Prior.
2. To offend; to irritate.
Why pique all mortals, that affect a name?
A fool to pleasure, yet a slave to fame! Pope.
The lady was piqued by her indifference, and began to mention going away. Female Quixote.
3. [With the reciprocal pronoun.] To value; to fix reputation as on a point.
[se piquer, French.]
Children, having made it easy to part with what they have, may pique themselves in being kind.
Locke.
Men apply themselves to two or three foreign,
dead, and which are called the learned, languages;
and pique themselves upon their skill in them. Locke.
- To PIQUEER. v. a. See PICKER.
- PICQUEER. n. s. A robber; a plunderer. Rather pickeerer.
When the guardian profess'd to engage in faction,
the word was given, that the guardian would soon be seconded by some other picqueers from the same camp. Swift.
- PIQUE'T. n. s. [picquet, Fr.] A game at cards.
She commonly went up at ten,
Unless piquet was in the way. Prior.
Instead of entertaining themselves at ombre or piquet, they would wrestle and pitch the bar.
Spektor.
- PI'RACY. n. s. [πικρατία; piratica, Latin;
piraterie, Fr. from pirate.] The act or practice of robbing on the sea.
Our gallants, in their fresh gale of fortune, began to skim the seas with their piracies. Carew.
Now shall the ocean, as thy Thames, be free
From both those fates of storms and piracy. Waller.

PIS

- Fame swifter than your winged navy flies,
Sounding your name, and telling dreadful news
To all that piracy and rapine use. Waller.
His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their piracies; though he practised the same trade. Arbutnot.
- PI'RATE. n. s. [πικρατης; pirata, Latin;
pirate, French.]
1. A sea robber.
Pirates all nations are to prosecute, not so much in the right of their own fears, as upon the band of human society. Bacon.
Relate, if business or the thirst of gain Engage your journey o'er the pathless main,
Where savage pirates seek through seas unknown
The lives of others, vent'rous of their own. Pope.
2. Any robber; particularly a bookfeller who seizes the copies of other men.
- To PI'RATE. v. n. [from the noun.] To rob by sea.
When they were a little got out of their former condition, they robbed at land and pirated by sea.
Arbutnot.
- To PI'RATE. v. a. [pirater, Fr.] To take by robbery.
They advertised, they would pirate his edition.
Pope.

PLANCHER. n. f. [plancher, Fr.] A floor of wood. Not used.

Oak, cedar, and chestnut are the best builders; some are best for planchers, as deal; some for tables, cupboards, and desks, as walnuts. Bacon.

PLANCHING. n. f. [In carpentry.] The laying the floors in a building. Dict.

PLANE. n. f. [planus, Lat. Plain is commonly used in popular language, and plane in geometry.]

1. A level surface.

Comets, as often as they are visible to us, move in planes inclined to the plane of the ecliptic, in all kinds of angles. Bentley.

Projectils would ever move on in the same right line, did not the air, their own gravity, or the ruggedness of the plane on which they move, stop their motion. Cheyne.

2. [plane, Fr.] An instrument by which the surface of boards is smoothed.

The iron is set to make an angle of forty-five degrees with the sole of the plane. Moxon.

TO PLANE. v. a. [planer, Fr.] from the noun.]

1. To level; to smooth; to free from inequalities.

The foundation of the Roman causeway was made of rough stone, joined with a most firm cement; upon this was laid another layer of small stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of rough stone, in which the stones of the upper pavement were fixt. Arbutnot.

2. To smooth with a plane.

These hard woods are more properly scraped than planed. Moxon.

PLANE-TREE. n. f. [platanus, Lat. plane, platane, French.]

The plane-tree hath an amentaceous flower, consisting of several slender stamina, which are all collected into spherical little balls and are barren; but the embryos of the fruit, which are produced on separate parts of the same trees, are turgid, and afterwards become large spherical balls, containing many oblong seeds intermixed with down: it is generally supposed, that the introduction of this tree into England is owing to lord chancellor Bacon.

Miller.

The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane.

Dryden.

PLANET. n. f. [planeta, Lat. πλανητα; planette, French.]

Planets are the errant or wandering stars, and which are not like the fixt ones always in the same position to one another: we now number the earth among the primary planets, because we know it moves round the sun, as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, and Mercury do, and that in a path or circle between Mars and Venus: and the moon is accounted among the secondary planets or satellites of the primary, since she moves round the earth: all the planets have, besides their motion round the sun, which makes their year, also a motion round their own axes, which makes their day; as the earth's revolving so makes our day and night: it is more than probable, that the diameters of all the planets are longer than their axes: we know 'tis so in our earth; and Flamsteed and Cassini found it to be so in Jupiter: sir Isaac Newton asserts our earth's equatorial diameter to exceed the other about thirty-four miles; and indeed else the motion of the earth would make the sea rise so high at the equator, as to drown all the parts thereabouts. Harris.

Barbarous villains! hath this lovely face

Rul'd like a wand'ring planet over me,
And could it not inforce them to relent? Shaks.

And planets, planet struck, real eclipse Them suffer'd. Milton.

There are seven planets or errant stars in the lower orbs of heaven. Brown.

The Chaldeans were much devoted to astrological devices, and had an opinion that every hour of the day was governed by a particular planet, reckoning them according to their usual order, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, Mercury, Luna. Wilkins.

PLANETARY. adj. [planetaire, Fr. from planet.]

PLA

1. Pertaining to the planets.

Their planetary motions and aspects. Milton.

To marble and to brass, such features give,

Describe the stars and planetary way,

And trace the footsteps of eternal day. Grenville.

2. Under the denomination of any particular planet.

Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's power,

That watch'd the moon and planetary hour,

With words and wicked herbs, from human kind

Had alter'd. Dryden.

I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and, I think, I have a piece of that leaden planet in me; I am no way facetious. Addison.

3. Produced by the planets.

Here's gold, go on;

Be as a planetary plague, when Jove

Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison

In the sick air. Shakspeare.

We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon and stars, as if we were villains by an enforced obedience of planetary influence. Shakspeare.

4. Having the nature of a planet; erratick.

We behold bright planetary Jove,

Sublime in air through his wide province move;

Four second planets his dominion own,

And round him turn, as round the earth the moon. Blackmore.

PLANETICAL. adj. [from planet.] Pertaining to planets.

Add the two Egyptian days in every month, the interlunary and plenilunary exemptions, the eclipses of sun and moon, conjunctions and oppositions planetical. Brown.

PLANETSTRUCK. adj. [planet and strike.]

Blasted: sidere afflatus.

Wonder not much if thus amaz'd I look,

Since I saw you, I have been planetstruck;

A beauty, and so rare, I did descry. Suckling.

PLANIFOLIOUS. adj. [planus and folium, Latin.] Flowers are so called, when made up of plain leaves, set together in circular rows round the centre, whose face is usually uneven, rough, and jagged. Dict.

PLANIMETRY. n. f. [planus, Lat. and μετρίω: planimetrie, French.] The mensuration of plane surfaces.

PLANIPETALOUS. adj. [planus, Latin, and πέταλον.] Flatleaved, as when the small flowers are hollow only at the bottom, but flat upward, as in dandelion and succory. Dict.

TO PLANISH. v. a. [from plane.] To polish; to smooth. A word used by manufacturers.

PLANISPHERE. n. f. [planus, Latin, and sphere.] A sphere projected on a plane; a map of one or both hemispheres.

PLANK. n. f. [planche, French.] A thick strong board.

They gazed on their ships, seeing them so great,

and consulting of divers planks. Abbot.

The doors of plank were; their close exquisite,

Kept with a double key. Chapman.

The smoothed plank new rubb'd with balm. Milt.

Some Turkish bows are of that strength, as to pierce a plank of six inches. Wilkins.

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,

And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryd.

Be warn'd to shun the watry way,

For late I saw adrift disjointed planks,

And empty tombs erected on the banks. Dryden.

TO PLANK. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover or lay with planks.

If you do but plank the ground over, it will breed

salt-petre. Bacon.

PLANOCONICAL. adj. [planus and conus, Latin.] Level on one side and conical on others.

Some few are planonical, whose superficies is in part level between both ends. Grew.

PLANOCONVEX. adj. [planus and convexus, Latin.] Flat on the one side and convex on the other.

It took two object-glasses, the one a planconvex for a fourteen feet telescope, and the other a large double convex for one of about fifty feet. Newton.

PLANT. n. f. [plante, Fr. planta, Latin.]

1. Any thing produced from seed; any vegetable production.

What comes under this denomination, Ray has distributed under twenty-seven genders or kinds:

1. The imperfect plants, which do either totally want both flower and seed, or else seem to do so.

2. Plants producing either no flower at all, or an imperfect one, whose seed is so small as not to be discernible by the naked eye. 3. Those whose seeds are not so small, as singly to be invisible, but yet have an imperfect or staminate flower; i. e.

such a one, as is without the petala, having only the stamina and the perianthium. 4. Such as have a compound flower, and emit a kind of white juice or milk when their stalks are cut off or their branches broken off. 5. Such as have a compound flower of a discous figure, the seed pappous, or winged with downe, but emit no milk. 6. The herbæ capitatae, or such whose flower is composed of many small, long, fistulous or hollow flowers gathered round together in a round button or head, which is usually covered with a squamous or scaly coat. 7. Such as have their leaves entire and undivided into jags.

8. The corymbiferous plants, which have a comound discous flower, but the seeds have no downe adhering to them. 9. Plants with a perfect flower, and having only one single seed belonging to each single flower. 10. Such as have rough, hairy or bristly seeds. 11. The umbelliferous plants, which have a pentapetalous flower, and belonging to each single flower are two seeds, lying naked and joining together; they are called umbelliferous, because the plant, with its branches and flowers, hath an head like a lady's umbrella: [1.] Such as have a broad flat seed almost of the figure of a leaf, which are encompassed round about with something like leaves.

[2.] Such as have a longish seed, swelling out in the middle, and larger than the former. [3.] Such as have a shorter seed. [4.] Such as have a tuberose

root. [5.] Such as have a wrinkled, channelled or striated seed. 12. The stellate plants, which are so called, because their leaves grow on their stalks at certain intervals or distances in the form of a radiant star: their flowers are really monopetalous, divided into four segments, which look like so many petala; and each flower is succeeded by two seeds at the bottom of it. 13. The asperifolia, rough leaved plants: they have their leaves placed alternately, or in no certain order on their stalks;

they have a monopetalous flower cut or divided into five partitions, and after every flower there succeed usually four seeds. 14. The suffrutices, or verticil-ate plants: their leaves grow by pairs on their stalks, one leaf right against another; their leaf is monopetalous, and usually in form of an helmet.

15. Such as have naked seeds, more than four, succeeding their flowers, which therefore they call polypermae plantæ semine nudo; by naked seeds,

they mean such as are not included in any seed pod.

16. Bacciferous plants, or such as bear berries. 17.

Multifiliquous, or corniculate plants, or such as have, after each flower, many distinct, long, slender, and many times crooked cases or filiquæ, in which their seed is contained, and which, when they are ripe, open themselves and let the seeds drop out. 18. Such as have a monopetalous flower, either uniform or difform, and after each flower a peculiar seed-case containing the seed, and this often divided into many distinct cells. 19. Such as have an uniform tetrapetalous flower, but bear these seeds in oblong filiquous cases. 20. Vasculiferous plants, with a tetrapetalous flower, but often anomalous.

21. Leguminous plants, or such as bear pulse, with a papilionaceous flower. 22. Vasculiferous plants with a pentapetalous flower; these have, besides the common calix, a peculiar case containing their seed, and their flower consisting of five leaves. 23. Plants with a true bulbous root, which consists but of one round ball or head, out of whose lower part go many fibres to keep it firm in the earth: the plants of this kind come up but with one leaf; they have no footstalk, and are long and slender: the seed vessels are divided into three partitions: their flower is sexapetalous. 24. Such as have their fruits approaching to a bulbous form: these emit, at first coming up, but one leaf, and in leaves, flowers and roots resemble the true bulbous plant. 25. Culmiferous plants, with a grassy leaf, are such as have a smooth hollow-jointed stalk, with one sharp pointed leaf at each joint, encompassing the stalk, and set out without any foot-stalk: their seed is contained within a chaffy husk. 26. Plants with a grassy leaf, but not culmiferous, with an imperfect or flaminous flower. 27. Plants whose place of growth is uncertain and various, chiefly water plants.

PLA

Butchers and villains,
How sweet a plant have you untimely cropt. Shaksf.
Between the vegetable and sensitive province there are plant-animals and some kind of insects arising from vegetables, that seem to participate of both. Hale.

The next species of life above the vegetable, is that of sense: wherewith some of those productions, which we call plant-animals, are endowed. Grew.

It continues to be the same plant, as long as it partakes of the same life, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, vitally united to the living plant, in a like continued organization, conformable to that sort of plants. Locke.

Once I was skill'd in ev'ry herb that grew,
And every plant that drinks the morning dew. Pope.
Some plants the sun-shine ask, and some the shade,
At night the nure-trees spread, but check their bloom
At morn, and lose their verdure and perfume. Harte.

2. A sapling.

A man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks. Shaksf.
Take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a sturdy stroke. Dryden.

3. [planta, Latin.] The sole of the foot.

Ainsworth.

PLI'ERS. n. f. [from ply.] An instrument by which any thing is laid hold on to bend it.

Pliers are of two sorts, flat-nosed and round-nosed; their office is to hold and fasten upon a small work, and to fit it in its place: the round-nosed pliers are used for turning or boring wire or small plate into a circular form. Moxon.

I made a detention by a small pair of pliers. Wifeman.

To PLIGHT. v. a. [plichten, Dutch.]

1. To pledge; to give as surety.

He plighted his right hand
Unto another love, and to another land. Spenser.
Saint Withold

Met the night mare, and her ninefold,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight. Shakspere.
I again in Henry's royal name,
Give thee her hand for sign of plighted faith. Shakspere.

Here my inviolable faith I plight,
Lo, thou be my defence, I, thy delight. Dryden.

New loves you seek,
New vows to plight, and plighted vows to break. Dryden.

I'll never mix my plighted hands with thine,
While such a cloud of mischiefs hangs about us. Addison.

2. To braid; to weave. [from plico, Lat. whence to ply or bend, and plight, pleight, or plait, a fold or flexure.]

Her head she fondly would disguise
With gaudie girlonds, or flesh flowrets dight
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. Spenser.
I took it for a fairy vision
Of some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live,
And play i' th' plighted clouds. Milton.

PLIGHT. n. f. [This word Skinner imagines to be derived from the Dutch, plicht, office or employment; but Junius observes, that plight, Saxon, signifies distress or pressing danger; whence I suppose, plight was derived, it being generally used in a bad sense.]

1. Condition; state.

When as the careful dwarf had told,
And made ensample of their mournful sight Unto his master, he no longer would
There dwell in peril of like painful plight. Spenser.
I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are. Shakspere.

Beseech your highness,
My women may be with me; for, you see,
My plight requires it. Shakspere.

They in lowliest plight repentant stood,
Praying. Milton.
Thou must not here
Lie in this miserable loathsome plight. Milton.
Most perfect hero tried in heaviest plight
Of labours huge and hard. Milton.

2. Good case.

Who abuseth his cattle and starves them for meat,
By carting or plowing, his gain is not great;
Where he that with labour can use them aright,
Hath gain to his comfort, and cattle in plight. Tupper.

3. Pledge; gage. [from the verb.]

That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care and duty. Shakespeare.

4. [from To plight.] A fold; a pucker; a double; a purple; a plait.

Yclad, for fear of scorching air,
All in a filken camus, lilly white,
Purled upon with many a folded plight. Spenser.

5. A garment of some kind. Obsolete.

Because my wrack
Chanc't on his father's shore, he let not lack
My plight, or coate, or cloake, or any thing Might cherish heat in me. Chapman.

PLINTH. n. f. [πλίνθος.] In architecture, is that square member which serves as a foundation to the base of a pillar; Vi-truvius calls the upper part or abacus of the Tuscan pillar, a plinth, because it resembles a square tile; moreover, the same denomination is sometimes given to a thick wall, wherein there are two or three bricks advanced in form of a plat-band. Harris.

To PLOD. v. n. [ploeghen, Dut. Skinner.]

1. To toil; to moil; to drudge; to travel.

A plodding diligence brings us sooner to our journey's end, than a fluttering way of advancing harts. L'Estrange.

He knows better than any man, what is not to be written; and never hazards himself so far as to fall, but plods on deliberately, and, as a grave man ought, puts his staff before him. Dryden.

Th' unletter'd christian, who believes in grofs, Plods on to heav'n, and ne'er is at a loss. Dryden.

Some stupid, plodding, money-loving weight,
Who wins their hearts by knowing black from white. Young.

2. To travel laboriously.

Rogues, plod away o' the hoof, seek shelter, pack.
Shakespeare.

If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I Glide thither in a day? Shakespeare.

Hast thou not held my stirrup?
Bare-headed, plodded by my foot-cloth mule,
And thought thee happy when I shook my head? Shakespeare.

Ambitious love hath so in me offended,
That barefoot plod I the cold ground upon,
With faintest vow my faults to have amended. Shaksf.

3. To study closely and dully.

Universal plodding prisons up
The nimble spirits in the arteries;
As motion and long during action tires
The finewy vigour of the traveller. Shakespeare.

He plods to turn his am'rous suit
T' a plea in law, and prosecute. Hudibras.

She reason'd without plodding long,
Nor ever gave her judgment wrong. Swift.

PLODDER. n. f. [from plod.] A dull heavy laborious man.

Study is like the heaven's glorious sun,
That will not be deep search'd with faucy looks;
What have continual plodders ever won,
Save base authority from others books? Shakespeare.

PLOT. n. f. [plot, Saxon. See PLAT.]

1. A small extent of ground.

It was a chosen plot of fertile land,
Amongst wide waves set like a little nest,
As if it had by nature's cunning hand
Been choicely picked out from all the rest. Spenser.

Plant ye with alders or willowes a plot,
Where yeerely as needeth mo poles may be got. Tupper.

This liketh moory plots, delights in sedge bowers. Drayton.

Many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kind for rape and villany. Shakspeare.

Were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marcus, they to dust would grind it,
And throw't against the wind. Shakspeare.

When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model,
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then we must rate the cost of the erection. Shaksf.

Weeds grow not in the wild uncultivated waste, but in garden plots under the negligent hand of a gardener. Locke.

2. A plantation laid out.

Some goddess inhabits this region, who is the soul of this soil; for neither is any less than a goddess, worthy to be shrined in such a heap of pleasures; nor any less than a goddess could have made it so perfect a plot. Sidney.

3. A form; a scheme; a plan.

The law of England never was properly applied unto the Irish nation, as by a purposed plot of government, but as they could insinuate and steal themselves under the same by their humble carriage. Spenser on Ireland.

4. [Imagined by Skinner to be derived from platform, but evidently contracted from complot, Fr.] A conspiracy; a secret design formed against another.

I have o'erheard a plot of death upon him. Shaksf.
Easy seems the thing to every one,
That nought could cross their plot, or them suppress. Daniel.

O think what anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots, and their last fatal periods!
O 'tis a dreadful interval of time,
Made up of honour all, and big with death! Addison.

5. An intrigue; an affair complicated, involved, and embarrassed; the story of a play, comprising an artful involution of affairs, unravelled at last by some unexpected means.

Nothing must be sung between the acts,
But what some way conduces to the plot. Roscom.

Our author
Produc'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice,
Made him observe the subject and the plot,
The manners, passions, unities, what not. Pope.

They deny the plot to be tragical, because its catastrophe is a wedding, which hath ever been accounted comical. Gay.

If the plot or intrigue must be natural, and such as springs from the subject, then the winding up of the plot must be a probable consequence of all that went before. Pope.

6. Stratagem; secret combination to any ill end.

Frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milton.

7. Contrivance; deep reach of thought.

Who says he was not
A man of much plot,
May repent that false accusation;
Having plotted and penn'd
Six plays to attend
The farce of his negotiation. Denham.

To PLOT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To form schemes of mischief against another, commonly against those in authority.

The subtle traitor
This day had plotted in the council house
To murder me. Shakspeare.

The wicked plotteth against the just.
He who envies now thy state,
Who now is plotting how he may seduce Thee from obedience. Milton.

The wolf that round th' inclosure prowls
To leap the fence, now plots not on the fold. Dryd.

2. To contrive; to scheme.

The count tells the marquis of a flying noise, that the prince did plot to be secretly gone; to which the marquis answer'd, that though love had made his highness steal out of his own country, yet fear would never make him run out of Spain. Watson.

To PLOT. v. a.

1. To plan; to contrive.

With shame and sorrow fill'd:
Shame for his folly; sorrow out of time
For plotting an unprofitable crime. Dryden.

The plovers when to scatter o'er the heath
And sing. Thomson.

PLOUGH. n. f. [plog, Sax. plog, Danish;
ploeg, Dutch.]

1. The instrument with which the furrows are cut in the ground to receive the seed.

Till th' out-law'd Cyclops land we fetcht; a race
Of proud-lin'd loiterers, that never sow,
Nor put a plant in earth, nor use a plow. Chapman.

Look how the purple flower, which the plough
Hath thorn in funder, languishing doth die. Peacham.

Some ploughs differ in the length and shape of their beams; some in the share, others in the coulter and handles. Mortimer.

In ancient times the sacred plough employ'd
The kings and awful fathers. Thomson.

2. Tillage; culture of land.

3. A kind of plane.

To PLOUGH. v. n. To practise aration; to turn up the ground in order to sow seed.

By mingling them with us. Shakspeare.

Doth the ploughman plough all day to sow? Ija.
They only give the land one ploughing, and sow white oats, and harrow them as they do black. Mortimer.

To PLOUGH. v. a.

1. To turn up with the plough.

Let the Volscians
Plough Rome and harrow Italy. Shakspeare.

Shou'd any slave, so lewd, belong to you;
No doubt you'd send the rogue, in fetters bound,
To work in Bridewell, or to plough your ground. Dryden.

A man may plough, in stiff grounds the first time fallow'd, an acre a day. Mortimer.

You find it ploughed into ridges and furrows. Mortimer.

If it be honour in your wars to seem
The same you are not, which for your best ends
You call your policy; how is't less or worse,
But it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour as in war. Shakspeare.

If she be curst, it is for policy,
For she's not froward, but modest. Shakspeare.

The best rule of policy, is to prefer the doing of justice before all enjoyments. King Charles.

The wisdom of this world is sometimes taken in scripture for policy, and consists in a certain dexterity of managing business for a man's secular advantage. South.

Get thee glass eyes,
And, like a scurvy politician, seem

To see things thou dost not. Shakspeare.

And 't be any way, it must be with valour; for policy I hate: I had as lief be a Brownist as a politician. Shakspeare.

Although I may seem less a politician to men, yet
I need no secret distinctions nor evasions before God. King Charles.

While emp'rick politicians use deceit,
Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat,
You boldly show that skill which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end. Dryden.

Coffee, which makes the politician wise,
And see through all things with his half-shut eyes,
Sent up in vapours to the baron's brain
New stratagems, the radiant lock to gain. Pope.

2. A man of artifice; one of deep contrivance.

Your ill-meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies. Milton.

If a man succeeds in any attempt, though undertook with never so much rashness, his success shall vouch him a politician, and good luck shall pass for deep contrivance; for give any one fortune, and he shall be thought a wise man. South.

PO'LITICK. adj. [πολιτικός.]

1. Political; civil. In this sense politica l is almost always used, except in the phrase body politick.

POL

Upon the temple. Milton.

PO'LTRON. n. s. [pollice truncato, from the thumb cut off; it being once a practice of cowards to cut off their thumbs, that they might not be compelled to serve in war. Saumaize. Menage derives it from the Italian poltro, a bed; as cowards feign themselves sick a-bed: others derive it from poletro or poltro, a young unbroken horse.] A coward; a nidget;
a scoundrel.

Patience is for poltrons. Shakspeare.
They that are bruised with wood or fists,
And think one beating may for once
Suffice, are cowards and poltrons. Hudibras.

They allow no polygamy: they have ordained, that none do intermarry or contract, until a month
be past from their first interview. Bacon.

He lived to his death in the sin of polygamy, without any particular repentance. Perkins.

Christian religion, prohibiting polygamy, is more agreeable to the law of nature, that is, the law of God, than Mahometism that allows it; for one man, his having many wives by law, signifies nothing, unless there were many women to one man in nature also. Graunt.

That nodding seem'd to consecrate his head. Dryd.
Dr. Lister has been guilty of mistake, in the reflections he makes on what he calls the sleeping Cupid with poppy in his hands. Addison.

And pale Nymphaea with her clay-cold breath;
And poppies, which suborn the sleep of death. Harte.

POPULACE. n. f. [populace, French; from populus, Latin.] The vulgar; the multitude.

Now swarms the populace, a countless throng,
Youth and hoar age tumultuous pour along. Pope.

The tribunes and people having subdued all competitors, began the last game of a prevalent populace, to chuse themselves a master. Swift.

POPULACY. n. f. [populace, French.] The common people; the multitude.

Under colours of piety ambitious policies march,
Not only with security, but applause as to the populacy. King Charles.

When he thinks one monarch's lust too mild a regiment, he can let in the whole populacy of sin upon the soul. Decay of Piety.

POPULAR. adj. [populaire, Fr. popularis, Latin.]

1. Vulgar; plebeian.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried in many places. King Charles.

The emmet join'd in her popular tribes
Of commonalty. Milton.
So the popular vote inclines. Milton.

2. Suitable to the common people; familiar;
not critical.

Homilies are plain and popular instructions. Hooker.

3. Beloved by the people; pleasing to the people.

It might have been more popular and plausible to vulgar ears, if this first discourse had been spent in extolling the force of laws. Hooker.

Such as were popular,
And well-deserving, were advanc'd by grace. Daniel.

The old general was set aside, and prince Rupert put into the command, which was no popular change. Clarendon.

4. Studious of the favour of the people.

A popular man is, in truth, no better than a prostitute to common fame and to the people. Dryden.

His virtues have undone his country;
Such popular humanity is treason. Addison.

5. Prevailing or raging among the populace: as, a popular distemper.

POPULARITY. n. f. [popularitas, Latin;
popularité, French; from popular.]

1. Graciousness among the people; state of being favoured by the people.

The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause;
the more depraved, subjection and tyranny. Bacon.

Your mind has been above the wretched affectation of popularity. Dryden.

Admire we then,
Or popularity, or stars, or strings,
The mob's applauses, or the gifts of kings? Pope.

He could be at the head of no factions and cabals, nor attended by a hired rabble, which his flatterers might represent as popularity. Swift.

2. Representation suited to vulgar conception; what affects the vulgar.

The persuader's labour is to make things appear good or evil, which as it may be performed by solid reasons, so it may be represented also by colours, popularities, and circumstances, which sway the ordinary judgment. Bacon.

POPULARLY. adv. [from popular.]

1. In a popular manner; so as to please the crowd.

The victor knight
Bareheaded, popularly low had bow'd,
And paid the salutations of the crowd. Dryden.

Influenc'd by the rabble's bloody will,
With thumbs bent back, they popularly kill. Dryden.

2. According to vulgar conception.

Nor can we excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow those commendatory conceits, which popularly set forth the eminency thereof. Brown.

TO POPULATE. v. n. [from populus,
Latin.] To breed people.

When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation, it is of necessity, that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon.

POPULATION. n. f. [from populate.] The state of a country with respect to numbers of people.

The population of a kingdom does not exceed the stock of the kingdom, which should maintain them; neither is the population to be reckoned only by number; for a smaller number, that spend more and earn less, do wear out an estate sooner than a greater number, that live lower and gather more. Bacon.

POPULOSITY. n. f. [from populosus.] Po-pulousness; multitude of people.

How it now conduceth unto populosity, we shall make but little doubt; there are causes of numerosity in any species. Brown.

POPULOUS. adj. [populosus, Lat.] Full of people; numerously inhabited.

A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heav'nly company. Shakspeare.

Far the greater part have kept Their station; heav'n, yet populous, retains Number sufficient to possess her realms. Milton.

POPULOUSLY. adv. [from populosus.] With much people.

POPULOUSNESS. n. f. [from populosus.]
The state of abounding with people.

This will be allowed by any that considers the vastness, the opulence, the populousness of this region, with the ease and facility wherewith 'tis governed. Temple.

PORCELAIN. n. f. [porcelaine, Fr. said to be derived from pour cent années; because it was believed by Europeans, that the materials of porcelain were matured under ground one hundred years.]

1. China; china ware; fine dishes, of a middle nature between earth and glass, and therefore semipellucid.

We have burials in several earths, where we put divers cements, as the Chinese do their porcelain. Bacon.

We are not thoroughly resolved concerning porcelain or china dishes; that according to common belief, they are made of earth, which lieth in preparation about a hundred years under ground. Brown.

The fine materials made it weak;
Porcelain, by being pure is apt to break. Dryden.

These look like the workmanship of heav'n:
This is the porcelain clay of human kind,
And therefore cast into these noble moulds. Dryd.

2. [portulaca, Lat.] A herb. Ainsworth.

PORCH. n. f. [porche, Fr. porticus, Lat.]

1. A roof supported by pillars before a door; an entrance.

Ehud went forth through the porch, and shut the doors of the parlour. Judges.
Not infants in the porch of life were free,
The sick, the old, that could but hope a day Longer by nature's bounty, not let stay. B. Jonson.

2. A portico; a covered walk.

All this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Shakspeare.

PORCUPINE. n. f. [porc espi, or epic, Fr.
porcospino, Italian.]

The porcupine, when full grown, is as large as a moderate pig: there is no other difference between the porcupine of Malacca and that of Europe, but that the former grows to a larger size. Hill.

This stubborn Cade
Fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine. Shaksp.

Long bearded comets stick,
Like flaming porcupines, to their left sides,
As they would shoot their quills into their hearts. Dryden.

By the black prince of Monomotapa's side were the glaring cat-a-mountain and the quill-darting porcupine. Arbutnot and Pope.

PORE. n. f. [pore, Fr. πός.]

1. Spiracle of the skin; passage of perspiration.

Witches, carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, by ointments, and anointing themselves all over, may justly move a man to think, that these fables are the effects of imagination; for it is certain, that ointments do all, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bacon.

Why was the fight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd,
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd;
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That the might look at will through every pore? Milton.

2. Any narrow spiracle or passage.

Pores are small interstices between the particles of matter which constitute every body, or between certain aggregates or combinations of them. Quincy.
From veins of vallies milk and nectar broke,
And honey sweating through the pores of oak. Dryden.

TO PORE. v. n. [πός is the optick nerve;
but I imagine pore to come by corruption from some English word.] To look with great intenseness and care; to examine with great attention.

All delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain;
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth, while truth the while Doth falsely blind the eyesight. Shakspeare.

A book was writ, called Tetrachordon,
The subject new: it walk'd the town a while Numb'ring good intellects; now seldom por'd on. Milton.

The eye grows weary, with poring perpetually on the same thing. Dryden.

Let him with pedants hunt for praise in books,
Pore out his life amongst the lazy gownmen,
Grow old and vainly proud in fancy'd knowledge. Rowe.

With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore;
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope.

He hath been poring so long upon Fox's martyrs, that he imagines himself living in the reign of queen Mary. Swift.

The design is to avoid the imputation of pedantry, to shew that they understand men and manners, and have not been poring upon old unfashionable books. Swift.

PORBLIND. adj. [commonly spoken and written purblind.] Nearighted; short-sighted.

Poreblind men see best in the dimmer light, and likewise have their sight stronger near at hand, than those that are not poreblind, and can read and write smaller letters; for that the spirits visual in those that are poreblind are thinner and rarer than in others, and therefore the greater light disperseth them. Bacon.

PO'RINESS. n. f. [from pory.] Fulness of pores.

I took off the dressings, and set the trepan above the fractured bone, considering the poriness of the bone below. Wifeman.

PORISTICK method. n. f. [ποριστικος.] In mathematicks, is that which determines

P O R

when, by what means, and how many different ways, a problem may be solved.

Dict.

PORK. n. f. [porc, French; porcus, Latin.] Swine's flesh unfalted.

You are no good member of the commonwealth; for, in converting jews to christians, you raise the price of pork. Shakspeare.

All flesh full of nourishment, as beef and pork, increase the matter of phlegm. Floyer.

PO'RKER. n. f. [from pork.] A hog; a pig.

Strait to the lodgments of his herd he run,
Where the fat porckers slept beneath the sun. Pope.

PO'RKEATER. n. f. [pork and eater.] One who feeds on pork.

This making of christians will raise the price of hogs; if we grow all to be porkeaters, we shall not shortly have a rather on the coals for money. Shakspeare.

PO'RKET. n. f. [from pork.] A young hog.

A priest appears,
And off'rings to the flaming altars bears;
A porcket, and a lamb that never suffer'd shears. Dryden.

PO'RKLING. n. f. [from pork.] A young pig.

A hovel

Will serve thee in winter, moreover than that,
To shut up thy porcklings thou meanest to fat. Tuff.

POROSITY. n. f. [from porous.] Quality of having pores.

This is a good experiment for the disclosure of the nature of colours; which of them require a finer porosity, and which a grosser. Bacon.

POROUS. adj. [poroux, Fr. from pore.] Having small spiracles or passages.

Vultures and dogges have torne from every lim
His porous skin; and forth his soul is fled. Chapman.

The rapid current, which through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,
Role a fresh fountain, and with many a rill Water'd the garden. Milton.

Of light the greater part he took, and, plac'd
In the sun's orb, made porous to receive
And drink the liquid light; firm to retain Her gather'd beams; great palace now of light. Milton.

POROUSNESS. n. f. [from porous.] The quality of having pores; the porous parts.

They will forcibly get into the porousness of it, and pass between part and part, and separate the parts of that thing one from another; as a knife doth a solid substance, by having its thinnest parts pressed into it. Digby on Bodies.

PORPHYRE. } n. f. [from πορφύρεα; porphy- PORPHYRY. } rites, Lat. porphyre, Fr.]

Marble of a particular kind.
I like best the porphyry, white or green marble, with a mullar or upper stone of the same. Peacham.

Consider the red and white colours in porphyre;
hinder light but from striking on it, its colours vanish, and produce no such ideas in us; but upon the return of light, it produces these appearances again. Locke.

PORPOISE. } n. f. [porc poisson, Fr.] The PORPUS. } scahog.

And wallowing porpice sport and lord it in the flood. Drayton.

Amphibious animals link the terrestrial and aquatick together; seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have the warm blood and entrails of a hog. Locke.

Par'd with unextinguish'd thirst,
Small beer I guzzle till I burst;
And then I drag a bloated corpus Swell'd with a dropsy like a porpus. Swift.

PORRACEOUS. adj. [porraceous, Lat. por- race, Fr.] Greenish.

If the lesser intestines be wounded, he will be troubled with porraceous vomiting. Wiseman.

PORRECTION. n. f. [porrectio, Lat.] The act of reaching forth.

PO'RRET. n. f. [porrum, Lat.] A scallion.

P O R

It is not an easy problem to resolve why garlick, molys and porrets have white roots, deep green leaves and black seeds. Brown.

PO'RRIDGE. n. f. [more properly porrage;
porrata, low Latin, from porrum, a leek.]

Food made by boiling meat in water;
broth.

I had as lief you should tell me of a mess of porridge. Shakspeare.

PO'RRIDGEPOT. n. f. [porridge and pot.]

The pot in which meat is boiled for a family.

PO'RRINGER. n. f. [from porridge.]

1. A vessel in which broth is eaten.

A small wax candle put in a socket of brass, then set upright in a porringer full of spirit of wine, then set both the candle and spirit of wine on fire, and you shall see the flame of the candle become four times bigger than otherwise, and appear globular. Bacon.

A physician undertakes a woman with fore eyes, who dawbs 'em quite up with ointment, and, while she was in that pickle, carries off a porringer. L'Est.

The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glitt'ring show,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.

2. It seems in Shakspeare's time to have been a word of contempt for a headdress;
of which perhaps the first of these passages may show the reason.

Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.—
—Why this was moulded on a porringer. Taming of the Shrew.

A haberdasher's wife of small wit rail'd upon me,
till her pink'd porringer fell off her head. Hen. VIII.

PORT. n. f. [port, Fr. portus, Lat.]

1. A harbour; a safe station for ships.

Her small gondelay her port did make,
And that gay pair, issuing on the shore,

I should be still Peering in maps for ports, and ways and roads. Shakspeare.

The earl of Newcastle seized upon that town;
when there was not one port town in England, that avowed their obedience to the king. Clarendon.

A weather-beaten vessel holds Gladly the port. Milton.

2. [porta, Lat. porte, Sax. porte, Fr.] A gate.

Shew all thy praises within the ports of the daughters of Sion. Psalms.

He I accuse,
The city ports by this hath enter'd. Shakspeare.

O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night; sleep with it now!
Yet not so found, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggen bound,
Snored out the watch of night. Shakspeare.

The mind of man hath two ports; the one always frequented by the entrance of manifold vanities; the other desolate and overgrown with grafs, by which enter our charitable thoughts and divine contemplations. Raleigh.

From their ivory port the cherubim Forth issu'd. Milton.

3. The aperture in a ship, at which the gun is put out.

At Portsmouth the Mary Rose, by a little sway of the ship in casting about, her ports being within sixteen inches of the water, was overset and lost. Raleigh.

The linstocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires,
The vig'rous seaman every port hole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.

4. [portée, Fr.] Carriage; air; mien; manner; bearing; external appearance;
demeanour.

In that proud port, which her so goodly graceth,
Whiles her fair face she rears up to the sky,
And to the ground her eyelids low embraceth,
Most goodly temperature ye may descry. Spenser.

Think you much to pay two thousand crowns,
And bear the name and port of gentleman? Shakspeare.

See Godfrey there in purple clad and gold,
His stately port and princely look behold. Fairfax.

P O R

Their port was more than human, as they stood;
I took it for a fairy vision

Of some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live. Milton.

Now lay the line, and measure all thy court,
By inward virtue, not external port;
And find whom justly to prefer above
The man on whom my judgment plac'd my love. Dryden.

A proud man is so far from making himself great by his haughty and contemptuous port, that he is usually punished with neglect for it. Collier.

Thy plummy crest
Nods horrible, with more terrific port
Thou walk'st, and seem'st already in the fight. Philips.

TO PORT. v. a. [porto, Lat. porter, Fr.]
To carry in form.

Th' angelick squadron bright
Turn'd fiery red, sharp'ning in mooned horns
Their phalanx, and began to hem him round
With ported spears. Milton.

PORTABLE. adj. [portabilis, Latin.]

1. Manageable by the hand.

2. Such as may be born along with one.
The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming the eye or envy of the world. Scutb.

3. Such as is transported or carried from one place to another.

Most other portable commodities decay quickly in their use; but money is by slower degrees removed from, or brought into the free commerce of any country, than the greatest part of other merchandize. Locke.

4. Sufferable; supportable.

How light and portable my pains seem now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king
bow. Shakspeare.

All these are portable
With other graces weigh'd. Shakspeare.

PORTABLENESS. n. f. [from portable.] The quality of being portable.

PORTAGE. n. f. [portage, French.]

1. The price of carriage.

He had reason to do, gaining thereby the charge of portage. Fell.

2. [from port.] Porthole.

Lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon. Shakspeare.

PORTAL. n. f. [portail, Fr. portella, Ital.]
A gate; the arch under which the gate opens.

King Richard doth appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun,
From out the fiery portal of the east. Shakspeare.

Though I should run
To those disclosing portals of the sun;
And walk his way, until his horses sleep
Their fiery locks in the Iberian deep. Sandys.

He through heav'n,
That open'd wide her blazing portals, led
To God's eternal house, direct the way. Milton.

The sick for air before the portal gasp. Dryden.

The portal consists of a composite order unknown to the ancients. Addison.

PORTANCE. n. f. [from porter, Fr.] Air;
mien; port; demeanour.

There stepped forth a goodly lady,
That seem'd to be a woman of great worth,
And by her stately portance born of heav'nly birth. Spenser.

Your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,
Which gibingly, ungravely, he did fashion. Shakspeare.

PORTA'SS. n. f. [sometimes called portuis;
and by Chaucer, portose.] A breviary;
a prayer book.

In his hand his portesse still he bare,
That much was worn, but therein little red;
For of devotion he had little care. Spenser.

An old priest always read in his portass mumpimus domine for sumptimus; whereof when he was admonished, he said that he now had used mump-fimus thirty years, and would not leave his old mumpimus for their new mumpimus. Camden.

PORTCULLIS. } n. f. [portecoulisse, Fr. quasi PORTCLUSE. } porta clausa.] A sort of machine like a harrow, hung over the gates of a city, to be let down to keep out an enemy.

Over it a fair portcullis hong,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comely compass and compacture strong,
Neither unseemly short, nor yet exceeding long.
Spenser.

The cannon against St. Stephen's gate executed so well, that the portcullis and gate were broken, and entry opened into the city. Hayward.

She the huge portcullis high up drew,
Which but herself, not all the Stygian pow'rs Cou'd once have mov'd. Milton.

Pyrrhus comes, neither men nor walls
His force sustain, the torn portcullis falls. Denham.
The upper eyelid claps down, and is as good a fence as a portcullis against the importunity of the enemy. More.

The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn;
And deluges of armies from the town
Come pouring in. Dryden.

PORTCULLIS. v. a. [from the noun.]
To bar; to shut up.

Within my mouth you have engaul'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips. Shakspeare.

PORTEND. v. a. [portendo, Lat.] To foretoken; to foreshow as omens.

As many as remained, he earnestly exhorted to prevent portended calamities. Hooker.

Doth this churlish superscription
Portend some alteration in good will? Shakspeare.
A moist and a cool summer portendeth a hard winter.
Bacon.

True opener of mine eyes,
Much better seem this vision, and more hope
Of peaceful days portends, than those two past.
Milton.

True poets are the guardians of a state,
And when they fail, portend approaching fate.
Roscommon.

The ruin of the state in the destruction of the church, is not only portended as its sign, but also inferred from it as its cause. South.

PORTENSION. n. f. [from portend.] The act of foretokening. Not in use.

Although the red comets do carry the portensions of Mars, the brightly white should be of the influence of Venus. Brown.

PORTENT. n. f. [portentum, Latin.] Omen of ill; prodigy foretokening misery.

O, what portents are these?
Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,
And I must know it. Shakspeare.

My loss by dire portents the god foretold;
You riven oak, the fairest of the green. Dryden.

PORTENTOUS. adj. [portentofus, Lat. from portent.]

1. Foretokening ill; ominous.
They are portentous things
Vato the climate that they point at. Shakspeare.

This portentous figure
Comes armed through our watch so like the king
That was. Shakspeare.
Every unwonted meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick. Glanville.

2. Monstrous; prodigious; wonderful. In an ill sense.

Overlay
With this portentous bridge the dark abyss. Milton.
No beast of more portentous size
In the Hercynian forest lies. Roscommon.

Let us look upon them as so many prodigious exceptions from our common nature, as so many portentous animals, like the strange unnatural productions of Africa. South.

The petticoat will shrink at your first coming to town; at least a touch of your pen will make it contract itself, and by that means oblige several who are terrified or astonished at this portentous novelty. Addison.

PORTER. n. f. [portier, Fr. from porta,
Latin, a gate.]

1. One that has the charge of the gate.
Porter, remember what I give in charge,
And, when you've so done, bring the keys to me.
Shakspeare.

Arm all my household presently, and charge
The porter he let no man in till day. Ben Jonson.
Nic. Frog demanded to be his porter, and his fishmonger, to keep the keys of his gates, and furnish the kitchen. Arbutnot.

2. One who waits at the door to receive messages.

A fav'rite porter with his master vie,
Be brib'd as often, and as often lie. Pope.

3. [porteur, Fr. from porto, Lat. to carry.]
One who carries burdens for hire.

It is with kings sometimes as with porters, whose packs may jostle one against the other, yet remain good friends still. Howel.

By porter, who can tell whether I mean a man who bears burthens, or a servant who waits at a gate?
Watts.

PORTERAGE. n. f. [from porter.] Money paid for carriage.

PORTESSE. n. f. A breviary. See PORTASS.

PORTGLAVE. n. f. [porter and glaiive, Fr. and Erse.] A sword-bearer. Ainsw.

PORTGRAVE. } n. f. [porta, Lat. and grave,
PORTGREVE. } Teutonic, a keeper.]
The keeper of a gate. Obsolete.

PORTHOLE. n. f. [from port and hole.] A hole cut like a window in a ship's side, where a gun is placed.

PORTICO. n. f. [porticus, Lat. portico, Ital.
portique, Fr.] A covered walk; a piazza.
The rich their wealth bestow
On some expensive airy portico;
Where safe from showers they may be born in state,
And free from tempests for fair weather wait. Dryd.

PORTION. n. f. [portion, Fr. portio, Lat.]

1. A part.

These are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him? Job.

Like favour find the Irish, with like fate
Advanc'd to be a portion of our state. Waller.

In battles won, fortune a part did claim,
And soldiers have their portion in the same. Waller.

Those great portions or fragments fell into the abyss; some in one posture, and some in another.
Burnet.

Pirithous no small portion of the war
Press'd on, and shook his lance. Dryden.

2. A part assigned; an allotment; a dividend.

Here's their pris'n ordain'd and portion set.
Milton.

Shou'd you no honey vow to taste,
But what the master-bees have plac'd
In compass of their cells, how small
A portion to your share would fall! Waller.

Of words they seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless they are born with a poetical genius, which is a rare portion amongst them. Dryden.

As soon as any good appears to make a part of their portion of happiness, they begin to desire it.
Locke.

When he considers the temptations of poverty and riches, and how fatally it will affect his happiness to be overcome by them, he will join with Agur in petitioning God for the safer portion of a moderate convenience. Rogers.

One or two faults are easily to be remedied with a very small portion of abilities. Swift.

3. Part of an inheritance given to a child;
a fortune.

Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.

4. A wife's fortune.

PORTION. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide; to parcel.

The gods who portion out

The lots of princes as of private men,
Have put a bar between his hopes and empire. Roué.

Argos the seat of sovereign rule I chose,
Where my Ulysses and his race might reign,
And portion to his tribes the wide domain. Pope.

2. To endow with a fortune.
Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans blest,
The young who labour, and the old who rest. Pope.

PORTIONER. n. f. [from portion.] One that divides.

PORTLINESS. n. f. [from portly.] Dignity of mien; grandeur of demeanour; bulk of personage.

Such pride his praise, such portliness his honour,
That boldness innocence bears in her eyes;
And her fair countenance like a goodly banner Spreads in defiance of all enemies. Spenser.

When substantialness combineth with delightful-ness, fulness with fineness, seemliness with portli-ness, and currantness with stayedness, how can the language sound other than most full of sweetness?
Camden's Remains.

PORTLY. adj. [from port.]

1. Grand of mien.
Rudely thou wrong'st my dear heart's desire,
In finding fault with her too portly pride. Spenser.

Your argosies with portly sail,
Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,
Or as it were the pageants of the sea,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakspeare.

A goodly, portly man and a corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage. Shakspeare.

A portly prince, and goodly to the fight,
He seem'd a son of Anak for his height. Dryden.

2. Bulky; swelling.
Our house little deserves
The scourge of greatness to be used on it;
And that same greatness too, which our own hands
Have help'd to make so portly. Shakspeare.

PORTMAN. n. f. [port and man.] An inhabitant or burgess, as those of the cinque ports. Dict.

PORTMANTAU. n. f. [portmanteau, Fr.]
A chest or bag in which clothes are carried.

I desired him to carry one of my portmanteaus;
but he laughed, and bid another do it. Spectator.

PORTOISE. n. f. In sea language, a ship is said to ride a portoise, when she rides with her yards struck down to the deck.
Dict.

PORTRAIT. n. f. [pourtrait, Fr.] A picture drawn after the life.

As this idea of perfection is of little use in portraits, or the resemblances of particular persons, so neither is it in the characters of comedy and tragedy, which are always to be drawn with some specks of frailty, such as they have been described in history. Dryden.

The figure of his body was strong, proportionable, beautiful, and were his picture well drawn, it must deserve the praise given to the portraits of Raphael.
Prior.

If a portrait painter is desirous to raise and improve his subject, he has no other means than by approaching it to a general idea; he leaves out all the minute breaks and peculiarities in the face, and changes the dress from a temporary fashion to one more permanent, which has annexed to it no ideas of meanness from its being familiar to us.
Reynolds.

In portraits, the grace, and, we may add, the likeness, consists more in taking the general air, than in observing the exact similitude of every feature. Reynolds.

TO PORTRAIT. v. a. [pourtraire, Fr. from the noun.] To draw; to portray. It is perhaps ill copied, and should be written in the following examples portray.

In most exquisite pictures, they blaze and portrait not only the dainty lineaments or beauty, but also round about shadow the rude thickets and craggy cliffs.
Spenser.

I portrait in Arthur the image of a brave knight, perfected in the twelve private moral virtues. Spens.
PO'RTRAITURE. n. f. [pourtraiture, Fr. from portray.] Picture; painted resemblance.

By the image of my cause I see
 The portraiture of his. Shakspeare.

Let some strange mysterious dream,
 Wave at his wings in airy stream
 Of lively portraiture display'd,
 Softly on my eye-lids laid. Milton.

Herein was also the portraiture of a hart. Brown.
 This is the portraiture of our earth, drawn without flattery. Burnet.

Her wry-mouth'd portraiture
 Display'd the fates her confessors endure. Pope.
 He delineates and gives us the portraiture of a perfect orator. Baker.

PO'RTRAY. v. a. [pourtraire, Fr.]

1. To paint; to describe by picture.

The earl of Warwick's ragged staff is yet to be seen portrayed in many places of their church steeple. Carew.

Take a tile, and so portray upon it the city Jerusalem. Ezekiel.

Our Phenix queen was there portray'd too bright, Beauty alone could beauty take so right. Dryden.

2. To adorn with pictures.

Various, with boastful argument portray'd. Milton.
PO'RTRESS. n. f. [from porter.] A female guardian of a gate.

The portress of hell-gate reply'd. Milton.

The shoes put on, our faithful portress
 Admits us in to storm the fortress;
 While like a cat with walnuts shod,
 Stumbling at ev'ry step she trod. Swift.

PO'RWIGLE. n. f. A tadpole or young frog not yet fully shaped.

That black and round substance began to grow oval, after a while the head, the eyes, the tail to be discernible, and at last to become that which the ancients called gyrinus, we a porwigle or tadpole. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PO'RY. adj. [poreux, Fr. from pore.] Full of pores.

To the court arriv'd, th' admiring son
 Beholds the vaulted roofs of pory stone. Dryden.

POSE. v. a. [from pose, an old word signifying heaviness or stupefaction. gesepe, Saxon. Skinner.]

1. To puzzle; to gravel; to put to a stand or stop.

Learning was pos'd, philosophy was set,
 Sophisters taken in a fisher's net. Herbert.

How God's eternal son should be man's brother,
Posed his proudest intellectual power. Craslow.

The only remaining question to me I confess is a posing one. Hammond.

As an evidence of human infirmities, I shall give instances of our intellectual blindness, not that I design to pose them with those common enigmas of magnetism. Glanville.

Particularly in learning of languages, there is least occasion for posing of children. Locke.

2. To appose; to interrogate.

She in the presence of others posed him and sifted him, thereby to try whether he were indeed the very duke of York or no. Bacon.

PO'SER. n. f. [from pose.] One that asks questions to try capacities; an examiner.

He that questioneth much, shall learn much; but let his questions not be troublesome, for that is fit for a poser. Bacon.

PO'SITED. adj. [positus, Latin. It has the appearance of a participle preterit, but it has no verb.] Placed; ranged.

That the principle that sets on work these organs is nothing else but the modification of matter, or the natural motion thereof thus, or thus posited or disposed, is most apparently false. Hale.

POSITION. n. f. [position, Fr. positio, Lat.]

1. State of being placed; situation.

Iron having stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude till it attain the former position. Wotton.

They are the happiest regions for fruits, by the excellence of soil, the position of mountains, and the frequency of streams. Temple.

Since no one sees all, and we have different prospects of the same thing, according to our different positions to it, it is not incongruous to try whether another may not have notions that escaped him. Locke.

By varying the position of my eye, and moving it nearer to or farther from the direct beam of the sun's light, the colour of the sun's reflected light constantly varied upon the speculum as it did upon my eye. Newton.

Place ourselves in such a position toward the object, or place the object in such a position toward our eye, as may give us the clearest representation of it; for a different position greatly alters the appearance of bodies. Watts' Logick.

2. Principle laid down.

Of any offence or sin therein committed against God, with what conscience can ye accuse us, when your own positions are, that the things we observe should every one of them be dearer unto us than ten thousand lives? Hooker.

Let not the proof of any positions depend on the positions that follow, but always on those which go before. Watts.

3. Advancement of any principle.

A fallacious illation is to conclude from the position of the antecedent unto the position of the consequent, or the remotion of the consequent to the remotion of the antecedent. Brown.

4. [In grammar.] The state of a vowel placed before two consonants, as pompous; or a double consonant, as axle.

POSITIONAL. adj. [from position.] Respecting position.

The leaves of cataputia or spurge plucked upwards or downwards, performing their operations by purge or vomit, as old wives still do preach, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations. Brown.

POSITIVE. adj. [positivus, Lat. positif, French.]

1. Not negative; capable of being affirmed; real; absolute.

The power or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.

It is well and truly said in schools, in sin there is nothing positive; but it is a want of that which ought to be, or subsist, partly in the nature of man, and partly in the actions of nature. Perkins.

Hardness carries somewhat more of positive in it than impenetrability, which is negative; and is perhaps more a consequence of solidity, than solidity itself. Locke.

Whatever doth or can exist, or be considered as one thing, is positive; and so not only simple ideas and substances, but modes also are positive beings, though the parts, of which they consist, are very often relative one to another. Locke.

2. Absolute; particular; direct; not implied.

As for positive words, that he would not bear arms against king Edward's son, though the words seem calm, yet it was a plain and direct overruling of the king's title. Bacon.

3. Dogmatical; ready to lay down notions with confidence; stubborn in opinion.

I am sometimes doubting, when I might be positive, and sometimes confident out of season. Rymer.

Some positive persisting fops we know,
 That, if once wrong, will needs be always so;
 But you, with pleasure, own your errors past,
 And make each day a critick on the last. Pope.

4. Settled by arbitrary appointment.

In laws, that which is natural, bindeth universally; that which is positive, not so. Hooker.

Although no laws but positive be mutable, yet all are not mutable which be positive; positive laws are either permanent or else changeable, according as the matter itself is, concerning which they were made. Hooker.

The law is called positive, which is not imbre'd, imprinted, or infused, into the heart of man, by nature or grace; but is imposed by an external mandate of a lawgiver, having authority to command. White.

Laws are but positive; love's pow'r we see,
 Is nature's sanction, and her first decree. Dryden.

5. Having the power to enact any law.

Not to consent to the enacting of such a law, which has no view besides the general good, unless another law shall at the same time pass, with no other view but that of advancing the power of one party alone; what is this but to claim a positive voice, as well as a negative? Swift.

6. Certain; assured: as, he was positive as to the fact.

POSITIVELY. adv. [from positivus.]

1. Absolutely; by way of direct position.

The good or evil, which is removed, may be esteemed good or evil comparatively, and not positively or simply. Bacon.

2. Not negatively.

It is impossible that any successive duration should be actually and positively infinite, or have infinite successions already gone and past. Bentley.

3. Certainly; without dubitation.

Give me some breath, some little pause,
 Before I positively speak in this. Shakspeare.

It was absolutely certain, that this part was positively yours, and could not possibly be written by any other. Dryden.

4. Peremptorily; in strong terms.

I would ask any man, that has but once read the bible, whether the whole tenor of the divine law does not positively require humility and meekness to all men. Spratt.

POSITIVENESS. n. f. [from positive.]

1. Actuality; not mere negation.

The positiveness of sins of commission lies both in the habitude of the will and in the executed act too; whereas the positiveness of sins of omission is in the habitude of the will only. Norris.

2. Peremptoriness; confidence.

This peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magisterialness in matters of opinion, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact; in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue.

POSITIVITY. n. f. [from positive.] Peremptoriness; confidence. A low word.

Courage and positivity are never more necessary than on such an occasion; but it is good to join some argument with them of real and convincing force, and let it be strongly pronounced too. Watts.

POSITURE. n. f. [positura, Latin.] The manner in which any thing is placed.

Supposing the positure of the party's hand who did throw the dice, and supposing all other things, which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but in this case the cast is necessary. Bramhall.

PO'SNET. n. f. [from bassinet, Fr. Skinner.] A little basin; a porringer; a skillet.

To make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin in equal quantity, and also whether it yield no soiliness more than silver; and again, whether it will endure the ordinary fire, which belongeth to chaffing-dishes, posnets, and such other silver vessels. Bacon.

POSSE. n. f. [Latin.] An armed power; from posse comitatus, the power of the shires. A low word.

The posse comitatus, the power of the whole county, is legally committed unto him. Bacon.

As if the passion that rules, where the sheriff of the place, and came off with all the posse, the understanding is seized. Locke.

POSSESS. v. a. [possessus, Lat. posseder, French.]

1. To have as an owner; to be master of; to enjoy or occupy actually.

She will not let instructions enter
 Where folly now possesses. Shakspeare.

Record a gift,
 Here in the court, of all he dies possess'd, Unto his son. Shakspeare.

2. To seize; to obtain.

The English marched towards the river Eske, intending to possess a hill called Under-Eske.

Hayward.

3. To give possession or command of any thing; to make master of. It has of before that which is possessed; sometimes anciently with.

Is he yet possess?

How much you would?—

—Ay, ay, three thousand ducats.

Shakspeare.

This man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight,

May be possessed with some store of crowns.

Shakspeare.

This possesses us of the most valuable blessing of human life, friendship.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Seem I to the sufficiently possess'd

Of happiness or not, who am alone

From all eternity?

Milton.

I hope to possess chymists and corpuscularians of the advantages to each party, by confederacy between them.

Boyle.

The intent of this fable is to possess us of a just sense of the vanity of these craving appetites.

L'Estrange.

Whole houses, of their whole desires possess,

Are often ruin'd at their own request.

Dryden.

Of fortune's favour long possess'd,

He was with one fair daughter only blest'd.

Dryden.

We possessed ourselves of the kingdom of Naples, the duchy of Milan, and the avenue of France in Italy.

Addison.

Endowed with the greatest perfections of nature, and possessed of all the advantages of external condition, Solomon could not find happiness.

Prior.

4. To fill with something fixed.

It is of unspeakable advantage to possess our minds with an habitual good intention, and to aim all our thoughts, words, and actions at some laudable end.

Addison.

Those, under the great officers, know every little tale that is before the great man, and if they are possessed with honest minds, will consider poverty as a recommendation.

Addison.

5. To have power over, as an unclean spirit.

Beware what spirit rages in your breast;

For ten inspir'd, ten thousand are possess.

Roscom.

Inspir'd within, and yet possess'd without.

Cleveland.

I think, that the man is possessed.

Swift.

6. To affect by intestine power.

He's possess with greatness,

And speaks not to himself, but with a pride

That quarrels at self-breath.

Shakspeare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue,

Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound

That ever yet they heard.

Swift.

Possess with rumours full of idle dreams,

Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear.

Shakspeare.

What fury, O son,

Possesses thee to bend that mortal dart

Against thy father's head?

Milton.

With the rage of all their race possess,

Stung to the soul the brothers start from rest.

Pope.

POSSESSION. n. f. [possession, Fr. possession, Latin.]

1. The state of owning or having in one's own hands or power; property.

He shall inherit her, and his generation shall hold her in possession.

Ecclesiasticus.

In possession such, not only of right,

I call you.

Milton.

2. The thing possessed.

Do nothing to lose the best possession of life, that of honour and truth.

Temple.

A man has no right over another's life, by his having a property in land and possessions.

Locke.

3. Madness caused by the internal operation of an unclean spirit.

To POSSESSION. v. a. To invest with property. Obsolete.

Sundry more gentlemen this little hundred *possess*eth and possessioneth.

Carew.

POSSESSOR. n. f. [from possession.] Master; one that has the power or property of any thing.

They were people, whom having been of old freemen and possessors, the Lacedemonians had conquered.

Sidney.

POSSESSIVE. adj. [possessivus, Lat.] Having possession.

POSSESSOR. n. f. [possessor, Lat. posseur, Fr.] Owner; master; proprietor.

Thou profoundest hell

Receive thy new possessor.

Milton.

A considerable difference lies between the honour of men for natural and acquired excellencies and divine graces, that those having more of human nature in them, the honour doth more directly redound to the possessor of them.

Stillington.

'Twas the interest of those, who thirsted after the possessions of the clergy, to represent the possessors in as vile colours as they could.

Atterbury.

Think of the happiness of the prophets and apostles, saints and martyrs, who are now rejoicing in the presence of God, and see themselves possessors of eternal glory.

Law.

POSSESSORY. adj. [possessoire, Fr. from possess.] Having possession.

This he detains from the ivy much against his will; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof.

Horvel.

PO'SSET. n. f. [posca, Lat.] Milk curdled with wine or any acid.

We'll have a posset at the latter end of a sea-coal fire.

Shakspeare.

In came the bridemaids with the posset,

The bridegroom eat in spight.

Suckling.

I allowed him medicated broths, posset ale, and pearl julep.

Wifeman.

A sparing diet did her health assure;

Or sick, a pepper posset was her cure.

Dryden.

The cure of the stone consists in vomiting with posset drink, in which althea roots are boiled.

Floyer.

Increase the milk when it is diminished by the too great use of flesh meats, by gruels and posset drink.

Arbutnot.

To PO'SSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To turn; to curdle: as milk with acids.

Not used.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through

The nat'ral gates and allies of the body;

And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posset

And curd, like eager droppings into milk,

The thin and wholesome blood.

Shakspeare.

POSSIBILITY. n. f. [possibilité, Fr.] The power of being in any manner; the state of being possible.

There is no let, but that as often as those books are read, and need so requireth, the stile of their differences may expressly be mentioned to bar even all possibility of error.

Hooker.

Brother, speak with possibilities,

And do not break into these woeful extremes.

Shakspeare.

When we have for the proof of any thing some of the highest kinds of evidence, in this case it is not the suggestion of a mere possibility that the thing may be otherwise, that ought to be any sufficient cause of doubting.

Wilkins.

Consider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of possibilities; and consequently could have nothing to recommend him to Christ's affection.

South.

A bare possibility, that a thing may be or not be, is no just cause of doubting whether a thing be or not.

Tillotson.

According to the multifariousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being.

Norris.

Example not only teaches us our duty, but convinces us of the possibility of our imitation.

Rogers.

POSSIBLE. adj. [possible, Fr. possibilis, Lat.] Having the power to be or to be done; not contrary to the nature of things.

Admit all these impossibilities and great absurdities to be possible and convenient.

Whitgift.

With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible.

Matthew.

All things are possible to him that believeth.

Mark.

Firm we submit, but possible to swerve.

Milton.

He must not stay within doors, for fear the house should fall upon him, for that is possible; nor must he go out, lest the next man that meets him should kill him, for that is also possible.

Wilkins.

It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles in men's minds in words of uncertain signification.

Locke.

Set a pleasure tempting, and the hand of the Almighty visibly prepared to take vengeance, and tell whether it be possible for people wantonly to offend against the law.

Locke.

POSSIBLY. adv. [from possible.]

1. By any power really existing.

Within the compass of which laws, we do not only comprehend whatsoever may be easily known to belong to the duty of all men, but even whatsoever may possibly be known to be of that quality.

Hooker.

Can we possibly his love desert?

Milton.

2. Perhaps; without absurdity.

Possibly he might be found in the hands of the earl of Essex, but he would be dead first.

Clarendon.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority circumscribed by laws.

Addison.

POST. n. f. [poste, Fr. equis positus cursor.]

1. A hasty messenger; a courier who comes and goes at stated times; commonly a letter carrier.

In certain places there be always fresh posts to carry that farther which is brought unto them by the other.

Abbot.

These I'll rake up, the post unsanctified

Of murth'rous lechers.

Shakspeare.

I fear my Julia would not deign my lines,

Receiving them by such a worthless post.

Shakspeare.

A cripple in the way out-travels a footman, or a post out of the way.

Ben Jonson.

I send you the fair copy of the poem on dulness, which I should not care to hazard by the common post.

Pope.

2. Quick course or manner of travelling.

This is the sense in which it is taken; but the expression seems elliptical: to ride post, is to ride as a post, or to ride in the manner of a post; courir en poste; whence Shakspeare, to ride in post.

I brought my master news of Juliet's death,

And then in post he came from Mantua.

To this same monument.

Romeo and Juliet.

Sent from Media post to Egypt.

Milton.

He who rides post through an unknown country, cannot distinguish the situation of places.

Dryden.

3. [poste, Fr. from positus, Lat.] Situation; seat.

The waters rise every where upon the surface of the earth; which new post, when they had once seized on, they would never quit.

Burnet.

4. Military station.

See before the gate what stalking ghost

Commands the guard, what sentries keep the post?

Dryden.

As I watch'd the gates,

Lodg'd on my post, a herald is arriv'd

From Cæsar's camp.

Addison.

Whatever spirit, careless of his charge,

His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large,

Shall feel sharp vengeance.

Pope.

Each of the Grecian captains he represents conquering a single Trojan, while Diomed encounters two at once; and when they are engaged, each in his distinct post, he only is drawn fighting in every quarter.

Pope.

5. Place; employment; office.

Every man has his post assigned to him, and in that station he is well; if he can but think himself so.

L'Estrange.

False men are not to be taken into confidence, nor fearful men into a post that requires resolution.

L'Estrange.

Without letters a man can never be qualified for any considerable post in the camp; for courage and corporal force, unless joined with conduct, the usual effects of contemplation, are no more fit to command than a tempest.

Collier.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's publick posts retire,
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys: Addison.
Certain laws, by suff'rers thought unjust,
Deny'd all posts of profit or of trust. Pope.
Many thousands there are, who determine the justice or madness of national administrations, whom neither God nor men ever qualified for such a post of judgment. Watts.

6. [postis, Lat.] A piece of timber set erect.

The blood they shall strike on the two side posts and upper posts of the house. Exodus.

Fir-trees, cypresses, and cedars being, by a kind of natural rigour, inflexible downwards, are thereby fittest for posts or pillars. Wotton.

Post is equivocal; it is a piece of timber, or a swift messenger. Watts.

To Post. v. n. [poster, Fr. from the noun.]
To travel with speed.

I posted day and night to meet you. Shakspeare.
Will you presently take horse with him,
And with all speed post with him towards the north?
Shakspeare.

Post speedily to my lord, your husband,
Shew him this letter. Shakspeare.

Most wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incestuous sheets. Shakspeare.
Then this, then that man's aid, they crave,
implore;

Post here for help, seek there their followers.
Daniel.

The Turkish messenger presently took horse, which was there in readiness for him, and posted towards Constantinople with as much speed as he could. Knolles.

Themistocles made Xerxes post apace out of Greece, by giving out that the Grecians had a purpose to break his bridge of ships athwart the Hellespont. Bacon.

Thousands at his bidding speed,
And post o'er land and ocean without rest. Milton.
With songs and dance we celebrate the day;
At other times we reign by night alone,
And posting through the skies pursue the moon.
Dryden.

No wonder that pastorals are fallen into disesteem;
I see the reader already uneasy at this part of Virgil, counting the pages, and posting to the Æneis.
Watts.

This only object of my real care,
In some few posting fatal hours is hurl'd From wealth, from pow'r, from love, and from the world. Prior.

To Post. v. a.

1. To fix opprobriously on posts.

Many gentlemen, for their integrity in their votes, were, by posting their names, exposed to the popular calumny and fury. King Charles.

On pain of being posted to your sorrow,
Fail not, at four, to meet me. Granville.

2. [poster, Fr.] To place; to station;
to fix.

The conscious priest, who was suborn'd before,
Stood ready posted at the postern door. Dryden.

He that proceeds upon other principles in his enquiry into any sciences, puts himself on that side, and posts himself in a party, which he will not quit till he be beaten out. Lacke.

When a man is posted in the station of a minister, he is sure, besides the natural fatigue of it, to incur
the envy of some, and the displeasure of others. Add.

3. To register methodically; to transcribe from one book into another. A term common among merchants.

You have not posted your books these ten years;
how should a man keep his affairs even at this rate?
Arbutnot.

4. To delay. Obsolete.

I have not stop't mine ears to their demands,
Nor posted off their suits with slow delays;
Then why should they love Edward more than me?
Shakspeare.

PO'STAGE. n. s. [from post.] Money paid for conveyance of a letter.

Fifty pounds for the postage of a letter! to send by the church, is the dearest road in christendom.
Dryden.

PO'STBOY. n. s. [post and boy.] Courier;
boy that rides post.

This genius came thither in the shape of a postboy, and cried out, that Mons was relieved. Tatler.

To POSTDATE. v. a. [post, after, Lat. and date.] To date later than the real time.

POSTDILUVIAN. adj. [post and diluvium, globe, how it hath stood for these last four thousand years. Woodward.

POSTDILUVIAN. n. s. [post and diluvium,
Lat.] One that lived since the flood.

The antediluvians lived a thousand years; and as for the age of the postdiluvians for some centuries, the annals of Phœnicia, Egypt, and China, agree with the tenor of the sacred history. Grew.

PO'STER. n. s. [from post.] A courier;
one that travels hastily.

Weird sisters hand-in-hand
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about. Shakspeare.

POSTERIOR. adj. [posterior, Lat. poste- rior, Fr.]

1. Happening after; placed after; following.

Where the anterior body giveth way, as fast as the posterior cometh on, it maketh no noise, be the motion never so great. Bacon.

No care was taken to have this matter remedied
by the explanatory articles posterior to the report.
Addison.

Hesiod was posterior to Homer. Broome.

This orderly disposition of things includes the ideas of prior, posterior, and simultaneous. Watts.

Posterity await for wretched years. Shakspeare.

Posterity inform'd by thee might know. Milton.

Their names shall be transmitted to posterity,
and spoken of through all future ages. Smalridge.

To the unhappy, that unjustly bleed,
Heav'n gives posterity t' avenge the deed. Pope.

They were fallible, they were men; but if poste- riety, fallible as they, grow bold and daring, where the other would have trembled, let them look to it.
Waterland.

PO'STERN. n. s. [poterne, French; posterne, Dutch; janua postica, Latin.] A small gate; a little door.

Ere dawning light
Discover'd had the world to heaven wide,
He by a privy postern took his flight,
That of no envious eyes he mote be spy'd. Spenser.

Go on, good Eglamour,
Out at the postern by the abbey wall. Shakspeare.

By broken byways did I inward pass,
And in that window made a postern wide. Fairfax.

These issued into the base court through a privy postern, and sharply visited the assailants with halberds. Hayward.

Great Britain hath had by his majesty a strong addition; the postern, by which we were so often entered and surpris'd, is now made up. Raleigh.

The conscious priest, who was suborn'd before,
Stood ready posted at the postern door. Dryden.

If the nerves, which are the conduits to convey them from without to the audience in the brain, be so disordered, as not to perform their functions, they have no postern to be admitted by, no other ways to bring themselves into view. Lacke.

A private postern opens to my gardens,
Through which the beauteous captive might remove.
Rowe.

POSTEXISTENCE. n. s. [post and existence.]
Future existence.

As Simonides has expos'd the vicious part of women from the doctrine of pre-existence, some of the ancient philosophers have satirized the vicious part of the human species, from a notion of the soul's postexistence. Addison.

POSTHACKNEY. n. s. [post and hackney.]
Hired posthorses.

Espying the French ambassador with the king's letter he takes in, in the box belonging to the proper road. Watts.

PO'STHUMOUS. adj. [posthumus, Lat. post- hume, Fr.] Done, had, or published after one's death.

In our present miserable and divided condition, how just soever a man's pretensions may be to a great or blameless reputation, he must, with regard to his posthumous character, content himself with such a consideration, as induced the famous sir Francis Bacon, after having bequeathed his soul to God, and his body to the earth, to leave his fame to foreign nations. Addison.

PO'STICK. adj. [posticus, Lat.] Backward.

The postick and backward position of the feminine parts in quadrupeds, can hardly admit the substitution of masculine generation. Brown.

POSTUREMASTER. n. s. [posture and master.] One who teaches or practises artificial contortions of the body.

When the students have accomplished themselves in this part, they are to be delivered into the hands of a kind of posturemaster. Speclator.

PO'SY. n. s. [contracted from poesy.]

1. A motto on a ring.

A paltry ring,
That she did give me, whose posy was,
Like cutler's poetry;
Love me and leave me not. Shakspeare.

You have chosen a very short text to enlarge upon; I should as soon expect to see a critick on the poesy of a ring, as on the inscription of a medal. Addison.

2. A bunch of flowers. Of unknown derivation.

With stone of vermeil roses,
To deck the bridegrooms posies. Spenser.

We make a difference between suffering thistles to grow among us, and wearing them for posies. Swift.

If he should still malignantly remain Fast foe the plebeians, your voices might Be curses to yourselves. Shakspeare.

Thou hast sought to make us break our vow,
To come betwixt our sentence and our power,
Which nor our nature nor our place can bear,
Our potency make good. Shakspeare.

By what name shall we call such an one, as exceedeth God in potency? Raleigh.

2. Efficacy; strength.

Use can master the devil, or throw him out
With wond'rous potency. Shakspeare.

POT'ENT. adj. [potens, Lat.]

1. Powerful; forcible; strong; efficacious.

There is nothing more contagious than some kinds of harmony; than some nothing more strong and potent unto good. Hooker.

I do believe,
Induc'd by potent circumstances, that
You are mine enemy. Shakspeare.

Here's another
More potent than the first. Shakspeare.

One would wonder how, from so differing premises, they should infer the same conclusion, were it not that the conspiracy of interest were too potent for the diversity of judgment. Decay of Piety.

When by command
Moses once more his potent rod extends Over the sea; the sea his rod obeys. Milton.

POT

Verbes are the potent charms we use,
Heroick thoughts and virtue to infuse. Waller.

The magistrate cannot urge obedience upon such potent grounds, as the minister can urge disobedience. South.

How the effluvia of a magnet can be so rare and subtle, as to pass through a plate of glass without any resistance or diminution of their force, and yet so potent as to turn a magnetick needle through the glass. Newton.

Ice doth not only submit unto actual heat, but indureth not the potential calidity of many waters. Brown.

3. Efficacious; powerful. Not in use.

Thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spurs
To make thee seek it. Shakspeare.

4. In grammar, potential is a mood denoting the possibility of doing any action.

POTENTIALITY. n. f. [from potential.] Possibility; not actuality.

Manna represented to every man the taste himself did like, but it had in its own potentiality all those tastes and dispositions eminently. Taylor.

God is an eternal substance and act, without potentiality and matter, the principle of motion, the cause of nature. Stillingfleet.

The true notion of a soul's eternity is this, that the future moments of its duration can never be all past and present; but still there will be a futurity and potentiality of more for ever and ever. Bentley.

POTENTIALLY. adv. [from potential.]

1. In power of possibility; not in act, or positively.

This duration of human souls is only potentially infinite; for their eternity consists only in an endless capacity of continuance without ever ceasing to be in a boundless futurity, that can never be exhausted, or all of it be past or present; but their duration can never be positively and actually eternal, because it is most manifest, that no moment can ever be assigned, wherein it shall be true, that such a soul hath then actually sustained an infinite duration. Bentley.

2. In efficacy; not in actuality.

They should tell us, whether only that be taken out of scripture which is actually and particularly there set down, or else that also which the general principles and rules of scripture potentially contain. Hooker.

By doctors bills to play the doctor's part,
Bold in the practice of mistaken rules,
Prescribe, apply, and call their masters fools. Pope.

POT'THER. n. f. [This word is of double orthography and uncertain etymology: it is sometimes written podder, sometimes pudder, and is derived by Junius from foudre, thunder, French; by Skinner from peutenen or peteren, Dutch, to shake or dig; and more probably by a second thought from poudre, French, dust.]

1. Bustle; tumult; flutter. A low word.

Such a potber,
As if that whatsoever god, who leads him,
Were crept into his human pow'rs,
And gave him graceful posture. Shakspeare.

Some hold the one, and some the other,
But howsoever they make a potber. Hudibras.

What a potber has been here with Wood and his brafs,

Who would modestly make a few halfpennies pass? Swift.

'Tis yet in vain to keep a potber
About one vice, and fall into the other. Pope.

I always speak well of thee,
Thou always speak'st ill of me;
Yet after all our noise and potber,
The world believes nor one nor t'other. Guardian.

2. Suffocating cloud. This justifies the derivation from poudre.

He suddenly unties the poke
Which from it sent out such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the potber. Drayton.

TO POT'THER. v. n. To make a blustering ineffectual effort.

How, if the festival of Paul be clear,
Plenty from lib'ral horn shall strow the year. Gay.

PRA'TTLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Empty talk; trifling loquacity.

In a theatre the eyes of men,
After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious. Shakspeare.

The bookish theorick,
Wherein the toged consuls can propose
As matterly as he; mere prattle, without practice,
Is all his soldierhip. Shakspeare.

The insignificant prattle and endless garrulity of the philosophy of the schools. Glanville.

PRA'TTLER. n. f. [from prattle.] A trifling talker; a chatterer.

Poor prattler! how thou talk'st. Shakspeare.
Prattler, no more, I say;
My thoughts must work, but like a noiseless sphere,
Harmonious peace must rock them all the day;
No room for prattlers there. Herbert.

PRA'VITY. n. f. [pravitas, Lat.] Corruption; badness; malignity.

Doubt not but that sin
Will reign among them, as of thee begot;
And therefore was law given them, to evince
Their natural pravity. Milton.

More people go to the gibbet for want of timely correction, than upon any incurable pravity of nature. L'Estrange.

I will shew how the pravity of the will could influence the understanding to a disbelief of christianity. South.

To PRAY. v. n. [prier, Fr. pregare, Ital.]

1. To make petitions to heaven.

I will buy with you, sell with you; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shakspeare.

Pray for this good man and his issue. Shakspeare.
Ne'er throughout the year to church thou go'st,
Except it be to pray against thy foes. Shakspeare.

I tell him, we shall stay here at the least a month;
and he heartily prays, some occasion may detain us longer. Shakspeare.

Is any sick? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him. James.

Unskilful with what words to pray, let me Interpret for him. Milton.

He that prays, despairs not; but sad is the condition of him that cannot pray; happy are they that can, and do, and love to do it. Taylor.

Thou, Turnus, shalt atone it by thy fate,
And pray to heav'n for peace, but pray too late.
Dryden.

He prais'd my courage, pray'd for my success;
He was so true a father of his country,
To thank me for defending ev'n his foes. Dryden.

They who add devotion to such a life, must be said to pray as christians, but live as heathens. Law.

Should you pray to God for a recovery, how rash would it be to accuse God of not hearing your prayers, because you found your disease still to continue. Wake.

2. To entreat; to ask submissively.

You shall find
A conqu'ror that will pray in aid for kindness,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to. Shakspeare.

How much more, if we pray him, will his ear
Be open, and his heart to pity incline? Milton.

2. To ask for as a suppliant.

He that will have the benefit of this act, must pray a prohibition before a sentence in the ecclesiastical court. Ayliffe.

3. To entreat in ceremony or form.

Pray my colleague Antonius I may speak with him;
And as you go, call on my brother Quintus,
And pray him with the tribunes to come to me.
Ben Jonson.

PRA'YER. n. f. [priere, French.]

1. Petition to heaven.

They did say their prayers, and address'd them
Again to sleep. Shakspeare.
O remember, God!

O hear her prayer for them as now for us. Shaksf.
My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is,
that they might be saved. Romans.

Unreasonable and absurd ways of life, whether in labour or diversion, whether they consume our time or our money, are like unreasonable and absurd prayers, and are as truly an offence to God. Law.

2. Mode of petition.

The solemn worship of God and Christ is neglected in many congregations; and instead thereof, an indigested form and conception of extemporal prayer is used. White.

3. Practice of supplication.

Were he as famous and as bold in war,
As he is fam'd for mildness, peace, and prayer.
Shakspeare.

4. Single formule of petition.

He fell to his devotions on that behalf, and made those two excellent prayers which were published immediately after his death. Fell.

Sighs now breath'd
Inutterable, which the spirit of prayer
Inspir'd. Milton.

No man can always have the same spiritual pleasure in his prayers; for the greatest saints have sometimes suffered the banishment of the heart, sometimes are fervent, sometimes they feel a barrenness of devotion; for this spirit comes and goes. Taylor.

5. Entreaty; submissive importunity.

Prayer among men is supposed a means to change the person to whom we pray; but prayer to God doth not change him, but fits us to receive the things prayed for. Stillington.

PRA'YERBOOK. n. f. [prayer and book.]

Book of publick or private devotions,
Get a prayerbook in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shaksf.
I know not the names or number of the family which now reigns, farther than the prayerbook informs me. Stoiff.

PRE. [præ, Lat.] A particle which, prefixed to words derived from the Latin, marks priority of time or rank.

To PREACH. v. n. [prædico, Lat. predicher, Fr.] To pronounce a publick discourse upon sacred subjects.

From that time Jesus began to preach. Matthew.
Prophets preach of thee at Jerusalem. Nebemiah.
It is evident in the apostles preaching at Jerusalem and elsewhere, that at the first proposal of the truth of Christ to them, and the doctrine of repentance, whole multitudes received the faith, and came in.
Hammond.

Divinity would not pass the yard and loom, the forge or anvil, nor preaching be taken in as an easier.

supplementary trade, by those that disliked the pains of their own. Decay of Piety.

As he was sent by his father, so were the apostles commissioned by him to preach to the gentile world. Decay of Piety.

The shape of our cathedral is not proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre with galleries. Graunt.

To PREACH. v. a.

1. To proclaim or publish in religious orations.

The Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge, that the word of God was preached of Paul. Acts.

He decreed to commissionate messengers to preach this covenant to all mankind. Hammond.

2. To inculcate publicly; to teach with earnestness.

There is not any thing publicly notified, but we may properly say it is preached. Hooker.

He oft to them preach'd

Conversion and repentance. Milton.

Can they preach up equality of birth,
And tell us how we all began from earth? Dryden.

Among the rest, the rich Galesus lies,
A good old man while peace he preach'd in vain,
Amidst the madness of th' unruly train. Dryden.

PREACH. n. f. [presche, Fr. from the verb.]

A discourse; a religious oration. Not in use.

This oversight occasioned the French spitefully to term religion in that sort exercised, a mere preach. Hooker.

PREACHER. n. f. [prescheur, Fr. from preach.]

1. One who discourses publicly upon religious subjects.

The Lord gave the word; great was the company of the preachers. Psalms.

You may hear the found of a preacher's voice, when you cannot distinguish what he saith. Bacon.

Here lies a truly honest man,
One of those few that in this town
Honour all preachers; hear their own. Craford.

2. One who inculcates any thing with earnestness and vehemence.

No preacher is listened to but Time, which gives us the same train of thought, that elder people have tried in vain to put into our heads before. Swift.

PREACHMENT. n. f. [from preach.] A sermon mentioned in contempt; a discourse affectedly solemn.

Was't you, that revel'd in our parliament,
And made a preachment of your high descent? Shakspeare.

All this is but a preachment upon the text. L'Estrange.

PREAMBLE. n. f. [preamble, Fr.] Something previous; introduction; preface.

How were it possible that the church should any way else with such ease and certainty provide, that none of her children may, as Adam, dissemble that wretchedness, the penitent confession whereof is so necessary a preamble, especially to common prayer? Hooker.

Truth as in this we do not violate, so neither is the same gain-sayed or crossed, no not in these very preambles placed before certain readings, wherein the steps of the Latin service book have been somewhat too nearly followed. Hooker.

Doors shut, visits forbidden, and divers contestations with the queen, all preambles of ruin, though now and then he did wring out some petty contentments. Wotton.

This preamble to that history was not improper for this relation. Clarendon.

With preambles sweet

Of charming symphony they introduce
Their sacred song, and waken raptures high. Milton.

I will not detain you with a long preamble. Dryd.

PREAMBULARY. } adj. [from preamble.]

PREAMBULOUS. } Previous. Not in use, though not inelegant.

He not only undermineth the base of religion, but destroyeth the principle preambulous unto all belief, and puts upon us the remotest error from truth. Brown.

PREAPPREHENSION. n. f. [pre and apprehend.] An opinion formed before examination.

A conceit not to be made out by ordinary eyes, but such as regarding the clouds, behold them in shapes conformable to preapprehensions. Brown.

PREASE. n. f. Presf; crowd. Spenser. See PRESS. Obsolete.

A ship into the sacred seas,
New-built, now launch we; and from out our prease
Chuse two and fifty youths. Chapman.

PRE'BEND. n. f. [præbenda, low Lat. præbende, French.]

1. A stipend granted in cathedral churches.

His excellency gave the doctor a præbend in St. Patrick's cathedral. Swift.

2. Sometimes, but improperly, a stipendiary of a cathedral; a prebendary.

Deans and canons, or præbends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use, to be of counsel with the bishop. Bacon.

PRE'BENDARY. n. f. [præbendarius, Lat.]

A stipendiary of a cathedral.

To lords, to principals, to præbendaries. Spenser.

I bequeath to the reverend Mr. Grattan, præbendary of St. Audon's, my gold bottle-screw. Swift.

PRECA'RIOUS. adj. [precarious, Latin; precaire, French.] Dependent; uncertain, because depending on the will of another; held by courtesy; changeable or alienable at the pleasure of another. No word is more unskillfully used than this with its derivatives. It is used for uncertain in all its senses; but it only means uncertain, as dependent on others: thus there are authors who mention the precariousness of an account, of the weather, of a die.

What subjects will precarious kings regard?

A beggar speaks too softly to be heard. Dryden.

Those who live under an arbitrary tyrannick power, have no other law but the will of their prince, and consequently no privileges but what are precarious. Addison.

This little happiness is so very precarious, that it wholly depends on the will of others. Spectator.

He who rejoices in the strength and beauty of youth, should consider by how precarious a tenure he holds these advantages, that a thousand accidents may before the next dawn lay all these glories in the dust. Rogers.

PRECA'RIOUSLY. adv. [from precarious.]

Uncertainly by dependence; dependently; at the pleasure of others.

If one society cannot meet or convene together, without the leave or licence of the other society; nor treat or enact any thing relative to their own society, without the leave and authority of the other; then is that society, in a manner, dissolved, and subsists precariously upon the mere will and pleasure of the other. Lessy.

Our scene precariously subsists too long
On French translation and Italian song:

Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stage,
Be justly warm'd with your own native rage. Pope.

PRECA'RIOUSNESS. n. f. [from precarious.]

Uncertainty; dependence on others. The following passage from a book, otherwise elegantly written, affords an example of the impropriety mentioned at the word precarious.

Most consumptive people die of the discharge they spit up, which, with the precariousness of the symptoms of an oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgment of extravasated matter, render the operation but little advisable. Sharp.

PRECAUTION. n. f. [precaution, Fr. from precautus, Lat.] Preservative caution; preventive measures.

Unless our ministers have strong assurances of his falling in with the grand alliance, or not opposing it, they cannot be too circumspect and speedy in taking their precautions against any contrary resolution. Addison.

To PRECAUTION. v. a. [precautioner, Fr. from the noun.] To warn beforehand.

By the disgraces, diseases and beggary of hopeful young men brought to ruin, he may be precautioned. Locke.

PRECEDANE'OUS. adj. [This word is, I believe, mistaken by the author for præcidaneus; præcidaneus, Latin, cut or slain before. Nor is it used here in its proper sense.] Previous; antecedent.

That priority of particles of simple matter, influx of the heavens and preparation of matter might be antecedent and precedaneous, not only in order, but in time, to their ordinary productions. Hale.

To PRECE'DE. v. a. [præcedo, Lat. præceder, French.]

1. To go before in order of time.

How are we happy, still in fear of harm?

But harm precedes not sin. Milton.

Arius and Pelagius durst provoke,

To what the centurie preceding spoke. Dryden.

The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners and contempt of religion. Swift.

2. To go before according to the adjustment of rank.

PRECEDENCE. } n. f. [from præcedo, PRECEDENCY. } Latin.]

1. The act or state of going before; priority.

2. Something going before; something past. Not used.

I do not like, but yet it does allay

The good precedence. Shakspeare.

It is an epilogue or discourse, to make plain

Some obscure precedence that hath before been said. Shakspeare.

3. Adjustment of place.

Among the laws touching precedence in Justinian, divers are, that have not yet been so received every where by custom. Selden.

The constable and marshal had cognizance, touching the rights of place and precedence. Hale.

4. The foremost in ceremony.

None sure will claim in hell

Precedence; none, whose portion is small

Of present pain, that with ambitious mind

Will covet more. Milton.

The royal olive accompanied him with all his court, and always gave him the precedency. Howel.

That person hardly will be found,

With gracious form and equal virtue crown'd;

Yet if another could precedence claim,

My fixt desires could find no fairer aim. Dryden.

5. Superiority.

Books will furnish him, and give him light and precedency enough to go before a young follower. Locke.

Being distracted with different desires, the next inquiry will be, which of them has the precedency, in determining the will to the next action? Locke.

PRECEDENT. adj. [precedent, Fr. præcedens, Lat.] Former; going before.

Do it at once,

Or thy precedent services are all

But accidents unpurpos'd. Shakspeare.

Our own precedent passions do instruct us,

What levity's in youth. Shakspeare.

When you work by the imagination of another, it is necessary that he, by whom you work, have a precedent opinion of you, that you can do strange things. Bacon.

Hippocrates, in his prognosticks, doth make good observations of the diseases that ensue upon the nature of the precedent four seasons of the year. Bacon.

The world, or any part thereof, could not be precedent to the creation of man. Hale.

PRE

Truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed, that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves; herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

PRECEDENT. n. f. [The adjective has the accent on the second syllable, the substantive on the first.] Any thing that is a rule or example to future times; any thing done before of the same kind.

Examples for cases can but direct as precedents only. Hooker.

Eleven hours I've spent to write it over,
The precedent was full as long a doing. Shakspeare.

No pow'r in Venice
Can alter a decree establish'd:
'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state. Shakspeare.

God, in the administration of his justice, is not tied to precedents, and we cannot argue, that the providences of God towards other nations shall be conformable to his dealings with the people of Israel. Tillotson.

Such precedents are numberless; we draw
Our right from custom; custom is a law. Granville.

PRECEDENTLY. adv. [from precedent, adj.] Beforehand.

PRECENTOR. n. f. [præcentor, Lat. præcentor, Fr.] He that leads the choir.

Follow this precentor of ours, in blessing and magnifying that God of all grace, and never yielding to those enemies, which he died to give us power to resist and overcome. Hammond.

PRECEPT. n. f. [precepto, Fr. præceptum, Lat.] A rule authoritatively given; a mandate; a commandment; a direction.

The custom of lessons furnishes the very simplest and rudest sort with infallible axioms and precepts of sacred truth, delivered even in the very letter of the law of God. Hooker.

'Tis sufficient, that painting be acknowledged for an art; for it follows that no arts are without their precepts. Dryden.

A precept or commandment consists in, and has respect to, some moral point of doctrine, viz. such as concerns our manners, and our inward and outward good behaviour. Ayliffe.

PRECEPTIAL. adj. [from precept.] Consisting of precepts. Not in use.

Men
Can counsel, and give comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine to rage;
Fetter strong madness in a filken thread,
Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shakspeare.

PRECEPTIVE. adj. [preceptivus, Latin; from precept.] Containing precepts; giving precepts.

The ritual, the preceptive, the prophetick, and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Government of the Tongue.

As the preceptive part enjoins the most exact virtue, so is it most advantageously enforced by the promissory, which, in respect of the rewards, and the manner of proposing them, is adapted to the same end. Decay of Piety.

The lesson given us here, is preceptive to us not to do any thing but upon due consideration. L'Estrange.

PRECEPTOR. n. f. [præceptor, Latin; præcepteur, French.] A teacher; a tutor.

Passionate chiding carries rough language with it, and the names that parents and preceptors give children, they will not be ashamed to bestow on others. Locke.

It was to thee, great Stagyrite, unknown,
And thy preceptor of divine renown. Blackmore.

PRECESSION. n. f. [from præcedo, præcessus, Lat.] The act of going before.

VOL. II.

PRE

PRECINCT. n. f. [præcinctus, Lat.] Outward limit; boundary.

The main body of the sea being one, yet within divers precincts, hath divers names; so the catholick church is in like sort divided into a number of distinct societies. Hooker.

This is the manner of God's dealing with those that have lived within the precincts of the church; they shall be condemned for the very want of true faith and repentance. Perkins.

Through all restraint broke loose, he wings his way
Not far off heav'n, in the precincts of light, Directly towards the new created world. Milton.

PRECIOUSITY. n. f. [from pretiosus, Lat.]

1. Value; preciousness.
2. Any thing of high price. Not used in either sense.

The index or forefinger was too naked whereto to commit their preciousities, and hath the tuition of the thumb scarce unto the second joint. Brown.

Barbarians seem to exceed them in the curiosity of their application of these preciousities. More.

PRECIOUS. adj. [precieux, Fr. pretiosus, Lat.]

1. Valuable; being of great worth.
Many things, which are most precious, are neglected, only because the value of them lieth hid. Hooker.

Why in that rawness leav'st you wife and children,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,
Without leave taking? Shakspeare.

I never saw
Such precious deeds in one that promis'd nought
But beggary and poor luck. Shakspeare.

These virtues are the hidden beauties of a soul, which make it lovely and precious in his sight, from whom no secrets are concealed. Spectator.

2. Costly; of great price: as, a precious stone.

Let none admire
That riches grow in hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. Milton.

3. Worthless. An epithet of contempt or irony.

More of the same kind, concerning these precious saints amongst the Turks, may be seen in Pietro della Valle. Locke.

PRECIOUSLY. adv. [from precious.]

1. Valuably; to a great price.
2. Contemptibly. In irony.

PRECIOUSNESS. n. f. [from precious.]
Valuableness; worth; price.

Its preciousness equalled the price of pearls. Wilkins.

PRECIPICE. n. f. [præcipitium, Lat. precipice, Fr.] A headlong steep; a fall perpendicular without gradual declivity.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shakspeare.

Where the water dasheth more against the bottom, there it moveth more swiftly and more in precipice; for in the breaking of the waves there is ever a precipice. Bacon.

I ere long that precipice must tread,
Whence none return, that leads unto the dead. Sandys.

No stupendous precipice denies Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.

Swift down the precipice of time it goes,
And sinks in minutes, which in ages rose. Dryden.

His generous mind the fair ideas drew
Of fame and honour, which in dangers lay;
Where wealth, like fruit, on precipices grew,
Not to be gather'd but by birds of prey. Dryden.

Drink as much as you can get; because a good coachman never drives so well as when he is drunk; and then shew your skill, by driving to an inch by a precipice. Swift.

PRECIPITANCE. } n. f. [from precipitant.]
PRECIPITANCY. } Rash haste; headlong hurry.

Thither they haste with glad precipitance. Milton.

PRE

*Tis not likely that one of a thousand such precipitancies should be crowned with so unexpected an issue. Glanville.

As the chymist, by catching at it too soon, lost the philosophical elixir, so precipitancy of our understanding is an occasion of error. Glanville.

We apply present remedies according unto indications, respecting rather the acuteness of disease and precipitancy of occasion, than the rising or setting of stars. Brown.

Hurried on by the precipitancy of youth, I took this opportunity to send a letter to the secretary. Swift.

A rashness and precipitance of judgment, and hastiness to believe something on one side or the other, plunges us into many errors. Watts.

PRECIPITANT. adj. [præcipitans, Lat.]

1. Falling or rushing headlong.

Without longer pause,
Downright into the world's first region throws
His flight precipitant. Milton.

The birds heedless while they strain
Their tuneful throats, the tow'ring heavy lead
Overtakes their speed; they leave their little lives
Above the clouds, precipitant to earth. Philips.

2. Hasty; urged with violent haste.

Should he return, that troop so blithe and bold,
Precipitant in fear, would wing their flight,
And curse their combrous pride's unwieldy weight. Pope.

3. Rashly hurried.

The commotions in Ireland were so sudden and so violent, that it was hard to discern the rise, or apply a remedy to that precipitant rebellion. King Charles.

PRECIPITANTLY. adv. [from precipitant.] In headlong haste; in a tumultuous hurry.

To PRECIPITATE. v. a. [præcipito, Lat. precipiter, Fr. in all the senses.]

1. To throw headlong.

She had a king to her son-in-law, yet was upon dark and unknown reasons, precipitated and banished the world into a nunnery. Bacon.

Ere vengeance
Precipitate thee with augmented pain. Milton.

They were wont, upon a superstition, to precipitate a man from some high cliff into the sea, tying about him with strings many great fowls. Wilkins.

The goddess guides her son, and turns him from the light, Herself involv'd in clouds, precipitates her flight. Dryden.

2. To urge on violently.

The virgin from the ground
Upstarting fresh, already clos'd the wound,

3. To hasten unexpectedly.

Short intermittent and swift recurrent pains do precipitate patients into consumptions. Harvey.

4. To hurry blindly or rashly.

As for having them obnoxious to ruin, if they be of fearful natures, it may do well; but if they be daring, it may precipitate their designs, and prove dangerous. Bacon.

Dear Erythræ, let not such blind fury
Precipitate your thoughts, nor set them working,
Till time shall lend them better means Than lost complaints. Denham.

5. To throw to the bottom. A term of chymistry opposed to sublime.

Gold endures a vehement fire long without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form. Grew.

To PRECIPITATE. v. n.

1. To fall headlong.

Hadst thou been aught but gossamer feathers,
So many fathom down precipitating,
Thou'dst shiver like an egg. Shakspeare.

2. To fall to the bottom as a sediment in chymistry.

By strong water every metal will precipitate. Bacon.

3. To hasten without just preparation.

PRE

Neither did the rebels spoil the country, neither on the one side did their forces increase, which might hasten him to precipitate and assail them. Bacon.

PRECIPITATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Steeply falling.

Barcephas saith, it was necessary this paradise should be set at such a height, because the four rivers, had they not fallen so precipitate, could not have had sufficient force to thrust themselves under the great ocean. Raleigh.

When the full stores their ancient bounds disdain, Precipitate the furious torrent flows; In vain would speed avoid, or strength oppose. Prior.

2. Headlong; hasty; rashly hasty.

The archbishop, too precipitate in pressing the reception of that which he thought a reformation, paid dearly for it. Clarendon.

3. Hasty; violent.

Mr. Gay died of a mortification of the bowels; it was the most precipitate case I ever knew, having cut him off in three days. Arbutnot.

PRECIPITATE. n. f. A corrosive medicine made by precipitating mercury.

As the escar separated, I rubbed the super-excrecence with the vitriol stone, or sprinkled it with precipitate. Wiseman.

PRECIPITATELY. adv. [from precipitate.]

1. Headlong; steeply down.

2. Hastily; in blind hurry.

It may happen to those who vent praise or censure too precipitately, as it did to an English poet, who celebrated a nobleman for erecting Dryden's monument, upon a promise which he forgot, till it was done by another. Swift.

Not so bold Arnall; with a weight of scull Furious he sinks, precipitately dull. Pope.

PRECIPITATION. n. f. [precipitation, Fr. from precipitate.]

1. The act of throwing headlong.

Let them pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock, That the precipitation might down-stretch Below the beam of sight, yet will I still Be this to them. Shakspeare.

2. Violent motion downward.

That could never happen from any other cause than the hurry, precipitation, and rapid motion of the water, returning at the end of the deluge towards the sea. Woodward.

3. Tumultuous hurry; blind haste.

Here is none of the hurry and precipitation, none of the blustering and violence, which must have attended those supposititious changes. Woodward.

4. In chymistry, sublimency: contrary to sublimation.

Separation is wrought by precipitation or sublimation; that is, a calling of the parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon.

The precipitation of the vegetative matter, after the deluge, and the burying it in the strata underneath amongst the sand, was to retrench the luxury of the productions of the earth, which had been so ungratefully abused by its former inhabitants. Woodward.

PRECIPITOUS. adj. [præcipites, Lat.]

1. Headlong; steep.

Monarchy, together with me, could not but be dashed in pieces by such a precipitous fall as they intended. King Charles.

2. Hasty; sudden.

Though the attempts of some have been precipitous, and their enquiries so audacious as to have lost themselves in attempts above humanity, yet have the enquiries of most defected by the way. Brown.

How precious the time is, how precipitous the occasion, how many things to be done in their just season, after once a ground is in order. Evelyn.

3. Rash; heady.

Thus fram'd for ill, he loos'd our triple hold, Advice unsafe, precipitous and bold. Dryden.

PRECISE. adj. [precis, Fr. præcisus, Lat.]

1. Exact; strict; nice; having strict and determinate limitations.

Means more durable to preserve the laws of God

PRE

from oblivion and corruption grew in use, not without precise direction from God himself. Hooker.

You'll not bear a letter for me; you stand upon your honour; why, thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep the term of mine honour precise. Shakspeare.

The state hath given you licence to stay on land six weeks, and let it not trouble you if your occasions ask farther time; for the law in this point is not precise. Bacon.

Let us descend from this top

Of speculation; for the hour precise

Exacts our parting. Milton.

In human actions there are no degrees and precise natural limits described, but a latitude is indulged. Taylor.

The reasonings must be precise, though the practice may admit of great latitude. Arbutnot.

The precise difference between a compound and collective idea is this, that a compound idea unites things of a different kind, but a collective, things of the same kind. Watts.

2. Formal; finical; solemnly and superstitiously exact.

The raillery of the wits in king Charles the Second's reign, upon every thing which they called precise, was carried to so great an extravagance, that it almost put all christianity out of countenance. Addison.

PRECISELY. adv. [from precise.]

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

Doth it follow, that all things in the church, from the greatest to the least, are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker.

When the Lord had once precisely set down a form of executing that wherein we are to serve him, the fault appeareth greater to do that which we are not, than not to do that which we are commanded. Hooker.

He knows, He cannot so precisely weed this land As his misdoubts present occasion, His foes are so enrooted with his friends. Shakspeare.

Where more of these orders than one shall be set in several stories, there must be an exquisite care to place the columns precisely one over another. Wotton.

In his tract my wary feet have slept, His undeviled ways precisely kept. Sandys.

The rule, to find the age of the moon, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and of the moon. Holder.

Measuring the diameter of the fifth dark circle, I found it the fifth part of an inch precisely. Newton.

2. With superstitious formality; with too much scrupulosity; with troublesome ceremony.

PRECISENESS. n. f. [from precise.] Exactness; rigid nicety.

I will distinguish the cases; though give me leave, in the handling of them, not to sever them with too much preciseness. Bacon.

When you have fixed proper hours for particular studies, keep to them, not with a superstitious preciseness, but with some good degrees of a regular constancy. Watts.

PRECISIAN. n. f. [from precise.]

1. One who limits or restrains.

Though love use reason for his precisian, he admits him not for his counsellor. Shakspeare.

2. One who is superstitiously rigorous.

These men, for all the world, like our precisians be, Who for some crows or faint they in the window see, Will pluck down all the church. Drayton.

A profane person calls a man of piety a precisian. Watts.

PRECISION. n. f. [precifion, Fr.] Exact limitation.

He that thinks of being in general, thinks never of any particular species of being; unless he can think of it with and without precision at the same time. Locke.

I have left out the utmost precisions of fractions in these computations as not necessary; these whole numbers shewing well enough the difference of the value of guineas. Locke.

I was unable to treat this part more in detail, without sacrificing perspicuity to ornament, without wandering from the precision or breaking the chain of reasoning. Pope.

PRECISIVE. adj. [from præcisus, Latin.] Exactly limiting, by cutting off all that is not absolutely relative to the present purpose.

Precisive abstraction is when we consider those things apart, which cannot really exist apart; as when we consider mode, without considering its substance or subject. Watts.

TO PRECLUDE. v. a. [præcludo, Latin.]

To shut out or hinder by some anticipation.

This much will obviate and preclude the objections of our adversaries, that we do not determine the final cause of the systematical parts of the world, merely as they have respect to the exigencies or conveniences of life. Bentley.

If you once allow them such an acceptance of chance, you have precluded yourself from any more reasoning against them. Bentley.

I fear there will be no way left to tell you, that I entirely esteem you; none but that which no bills can preclude, and no king can prevent. Pope.

PRECOCIOUS. adj. [præcocius, Lat. præcose, Fr.] Ripe before the time.

Many precocious trees, and such as have their spring in the winter, may be found in moist parts. Brown.

PRECOCITY. n. f. [from precocious.] Ripe-ness before the time.

Some impute the cause of his fall to a precocity of spirit and valour in him; and that therefore some infectious southern air did blast him. Howel.

TO PRECOGITATE. v. a. [præcogito, Lat.]

To consider or scheme beforehand.

PRECOGNITION. n. f. [præ and cognitio, Lat.] Previous knowledge; antecedent examination.

PRECONCEIT. n. f. [pre and conceit.] An opinion previously formed.

A thing in reason impossible, which notwithstanding through their misfashioned preconceit, appeared unto them no less certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures. Hooker.

TO PRECONCEIVE. v. a. [pre and conceive.]

To form an opinion beforehand; to imagine beforehand.

In a dead plain the way seemeth the longer, because the eye hath preconceived it shorter than the truth; and the frustrations of that maketh it seem so. Bacon.

Fondness of preconceived opinions is not like to render your reports suspect, nor for want of care, defective. Glanville.

The reason why men are so weak in governing is, because most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to comply subsequently. South.

PRECONCEPTION. n. f. [pre and conception.] Opinion previously formed.

Custom with most men prevails more than truth; according to the notions and preconceptions, which it hath formed in our minds, we shape the discourse of reason itself. Hume.

PRECONTRACT. n. f. [pre and contract.]

This was formerly accented on the last syllable. A contract previous to another.

He is your husband on a precontract;

To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin. Shakspeare.

TO PRECONTRACT. v. a. [pre and contract.]

To contract or bargain beforehand.

Some are such as a man cannot make his wife though he himself be unmarried, because they are already precontracted to some other; or else are too near a degree of affinity or consanguinity. Ayliff.

PRECURSE. n. f. [from præcurro, Latin.] Forerunning.

PRE

The like precursor of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding still the fates,
And prologue to the omen coming on,
Have heaven and earth together demonstrated. Shak.

PRECURSOR. n. f. [præcursor, Lat. præcur- seur, Fr.] Forerunner; harbinger.
Jove's lightnings, the precursors
Of dreadful thunder claps, more momentary
Were not. Shakspeare.

This contagion might have been prefaged upon consideration of its precursors, viz. a rude winter, and a close, sulphurous and fiery air. Harvey.

Thomas Burnet played the precursor to the coming of Homer in his Homerides. Pope.

PREDACEOUS. adj. [from præda, Latin.]
Living by prey.
As those are endowed with poison, because they are predaceous, so these need it not, because their food is near at hand, and may be obtained without contest. Derham.

PREDAL. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Robbing; practising plunder. This word is not countenanced from analogy.
Sarmatia, laid by predal rapine low,
Mourn'd the hard yoke, and sought relief in vain.
Sa. Boyse.

PREDATORY. adj. [prædatorius, Lat. from præda, Lat.]
1. Plundering; practising rapine.
The king called his parliament, where he exaggerated the malice and the cruel predatory war made by Scotland. Bacon.

2. Hungry; preying; rapacious; ravenous.
The evils that come of exercise are, that it maketh
the spirits more hot and predatory. Bacon.

PREDECEASED. adj. [pre and deceased.]
Dead before.
Will you mock at an ancient tradition, began upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valour? Shakspeare.

PREDECESSOR. n. f. [predecessor, Fr. præ and decedo, Lat.]
1. One that was in any state or place before another.
In these pastoral pastimes, a great many days were spent to follow their flying predecessors. Sidney.

There is cause, why we should be slow and unwilling to change, without very urgent necessity, the ancient ordinances, rites, and approved customs of our venerable predecessors. Hooker.

If I seem partial to my predecessor in the laurel,
the friends of antiquity are not few. Dryden.

The present pope, who is well acquainted with the secret history, and the weakness of his prede- cessor, seems resolved to bring the project to its perfection. Addison.

The more beauteous Cloe sat to thee,
Good Howard, emulous of Apelles' art;
But happy thou from Cupid's arrow free,
And flames that pierc'd thy predecessor's heart.
Prior.

2. Ancestor.

PREDESTINARIAN. n. f. [from predesti- nate.] One that holds the doctrine of predestination.
Why does the predestinarian so adventurously climb into heaven, to ransack the celestial archives, read God's hidden decrees, when with less labour
he may secure an authentick transcript within himself? Decay of Piety.

TO PREDESTINATE. v. a. [predestiner,
Fr. præ and destino, Lat.] To appoint beforehand by irreversible decree.
Some gentleman or other shall 'scape a predestinate
scratcht face. Shakspeare.

Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate
to be confirmed to the image of his son. Romans.

Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself. Ephefians.

TO PREDESTINATE. v. n. To hold predestination. In ludicrous language.
His ruff crest he rears,
And pricks up his predestinating ears. Dryden.

PRE

PREDESTINATION. n. f. [predestination,
Fr. from predestinate.] Fatal decree;
preordination.
Predestination we can difference no otherwise from providence and prescience, than this, that prescience only foreseeth, providence foreseeth and careth for,
and hath respect to all creatures, and predestination is only of men; and yet not of all to men belonging, but of their salvation properly in the common use of divines; or perdition, as some have used it. Raleigh.

Nor can they justly accuse
Their maker, or their making, or their fate;
As if predestination over-rul'd
Their will, dispos'd by absolute decree,
Or high fore-knowledge. Milton.

PREDESTINATOR. n. f. [from predestinate.]
One that holds predestination or the prevalence of pre-established necessity.
Me, mine example let the stocks use,
Their sad and cruel doctrine to maintain;
Let all predestinators me produce,
Who struggle with eternal fate in vain. Cowley.

TO PREDESTINE. v. a. [pre and destine.]
To decree beforehand.
Ye careful angels whom eternal fate
Ordains on earth and human acts to wait,
Who turn with secret pow'r this restless ball,
And bid predestin'd empires rise and fall. Prior.

PREDETERMINATION. n. f. [predetermi- nation, French; pre and determination.]
Determination made beforehand.
This predetermination of God's own will is so far from being the determining of ours, that it is distinctly the contrary; for supposing God to predeter-mine that I shall act freely; 'tis certain from thence, that my will is free in respect to God, and not predetermined. Hammond.

The truth of the catholick doctrine of all ages, in points of predetermination and irresistibility, stands in opposition to the Calvinists. Hammond.

TO PREDETERMINE. v. a. [pre and deter- mine.] To doom or confine by previous decree.
We see in brutes certain sensible instincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty, whereby they are predetermined to the convenience of the sensible life.
Hale.

PREDIAL. adj. [prædium, Lat.] Consisting of farms.
By the civil law, their predial estates are liable to fiscal payments and taxes, as not being appropriated for the service of divine worship, but for profane uses.
Ayliffe.

PREDICABLE. adj. [predicable, Fr. præ- dicabilis, Lat.] Such as may be affirmed of something.

PREDICABLE. n. f. [prædicabile, Lat.] A logical term, denoting one of the five things which can be affirmed of any thing.
These they call the five predicables; because every thing that is affirmed concerning any being, must be the genus, species, difference, some property or accident. Watts.

PREDICAMENT. n. f. [predicament, Fr.
prædicamentum, Lat.]
1. A class or arrangement of beings or substances ranked according to their natures: called also catagorema or cate- gory. Harris.
If there were nothing but bodies to be ranked by them in the predicament of place, then that description would be allowed by them as sufficient. Digby.

2. Class or kind described by any definitive marks.
The offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice;
In which predicament I say thou stand'st. Shaksp.

I shew the line and the predicament,
Wherein you range under this subtle king. Shak.

PREDICAMENTAL. adj. [from predica- ment.] Relating to predicaments.

PRE

PREDICANT. n. f. [prædicans, Lat.] One that affirms any thing.

TO PREDICATE. v. a. [prædico, Latin.]
To affirm any thing of another thing.
All propositions, wherein a part of the complex idea, which any term stands for, is predicated of that term, are only verbal; v. g. to say that gold is a metal. Locke.

TO PREDICATE. v. n. To affirm; to comprise an affirmation.
It were a presumption to think, that any thing in any created nature can bear any perfect resemblance of the incomprehensible perfection of the divine nature, very being itself not predicating univo-cally touching him and any created being. Hale.

PREDICATE. n. f. [prædicatum, Latin.]
That which is affirmed or denied of the subject: as, man is rational; man is not immortal.
The predicate is that which is affirmed or denied of the subject. Watts.

PREDICATION. n. f. [prædicatio, Latin;
from predicate.] Affirmation concerning any thing.
Let us reason from them as well as we can; they are only about identical predications and influence. Locke.

TO PREDICT. v. a. [prædictus, Latin;
predire, Fr.] To foretel; to foreshow.
He is always inveighing against such unequal distributions; nor does he ever cease to predict publick ruins, till his private are repaired. Government of the Tongue.

PREDICTION. n. f. [prædictio, Lat. pre- dictio, Fr. from predict.] Prophecy; declaration of something future.
These predictions
Are to the world in general, as to Cæsar. Shaksp.

The predictions of cold and long winters, hot and dry summers, are good to be known. Bacon.

How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!
Measur'd this transient world the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd. Milton.

In Christ they all meet with an invincible evidence, as if they were not predictions, but after-relations; and the penmen of them not prophets but evangelists. South.

He, who prophesy'd the best,
Approves the judgment to the rest;
He'd rather choose that I should die,
Than his prediction prove a lie. Swift.

PREDICTOR. n. f. [from predict.] Fore-teller.
Whether he has not been the cause of this poor man's death, as well as the predictor, may be disputed. Swift.

PREDIGE'STION. n. f. [pre and digestion.]
Digestion too soon performed.
Predigestion, or hasty digestion, fills the body full of crudities and seeds of diseases. Bacon.

TO PREDISPOSE. v. a. [pre and dispose.]
To adapt previously to any certain purpose.
Vegetable productions require heat of the sun, to predispose, and excite the earth and the seeds. Burnet.

Unless nature be predisposed to friendship by its own propensity, no arts of obligation shall be able to abate the secret hatred of some persons towards others. South.

PREDISPOSITION. n. f. [pre and disposi- tion.] Previous adaptation to any certain purpose.
The disease was conceived to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons. Bacon.

Tunes and airs have in themselves some affinity with the affections; so as it is no marvel if they alter the spirits, considering that tunes have a pre- disposition to the motion of the spirits. Bacon.

External accidents are often the occasional cause of the king's evil; but they suppose a predisposition
of the body. Wijeman.

PREDOMINANCE. } n. s. [præ and domina, PREDOMINANCY. } Lat.] Prevalence; superiority; ascendancy; superiour influence.

We make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and the stars, as if we were knaves, thieves, and treacherous by spherical predominance. Shaksp.

An inflammation consists only of a sanguineous affluxion, or else is denominated from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler. Brown.

In human bodies, there is an incessant warfare amongst the humours for predominancy. Horwel.

The true cause of the Pharisees disbelief of Christ's doctrine, was the predominance of their covetousness and ambition over their will. South.

The several rays in white light do retain their colorific qualities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do, by their excess and predominance, cause their proper colour to appear. Newton.

PREDOMINANT. adj. [predominant, Fr. præ and dominor, Latin.] Prevalent; supreme in influence; ascendant.

Miserable were the condition of that church, the weighty affairs whereof should be ordered by those deliberations, wherein such an humour as this were predominant. Hooker.

Foul subornation is predominant, And equity exil'd your highness' land. Shaksp.

It is a planet, that will strike Where 'tis predominant; and 'tis powerful. Shaksp.

Those helps were overweighed by things that made against him, and were predominant in the king's mind. Bacon.

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n, Rise on the earth; or earth rise on the sun. Milton.

I could shew you several pieces, where the beauties of this kind are so predominant, that you could never be able to read or understand them. Swift.

TO PREDOMINATE. v. n. [predominer, Fr. præ and dominor, Lat.] To prevail; to be ascendant; to be supreme in influence.

So much did love t' her executed lord Predominate in this fair lady's heart. Daniel.

The gods formed women's souls out of these principles which compose several kinds of animals; and their good or bad disposition arises, according as such and such principles predominate in their constitutions. Addison.

The rays, reflected least obliquely, may predominate over the rest, so much as to cause a heap of such particles to appear very intensely of their colour. Newton's Opticks.

Where judgment is at a loss to determine the choice of a lady who has several lovers, fancy may the more allowably predominate. Clarissa.

TO PREELECT. v. a. [pre and elect, Lat.] To choose by previous decision.

PREEMINENCE. n. s. [preeminence, Fr. pre and eminence. It is sometimes written, to avoid the junction of ee, preheminence.]

1. Superiority of excellence.

I plead for the preeminence of epick poetry. Dry.

Let profit have the preeminence of honour in the end of poetry; pleasure, though, but the second in degree, is the first in favour. Dryden.

It is a greater preeminence to have life, than to be without it; to have life and sense, than to have life only; to have life, sense, and reason, than to have only life and sense. Wilkins.

The preeminence of christianity to any other religious scheme which preceded it, appears from this, that the most eminent among the Pagan philosophers disclaimed many of those superstitious follies which are condemned by revealed religion. Addison.

2. Precedence; priority of place.

His lance brought him captives to the triumph of Artesia's beauty, such as, though Artesia be amongst the fairest, yet in that company were to have the preeminence. Sidney.

He touched it as a special preeminence of Junias and Andronicus, that in christianity they were his ancients. Hooker.

I do invest you jointly with my power, Preeminence, and all the large effects That troop with majesty. Shaksp.

The English desired no preeminence, but offered equality both in liberty and privilege, and in capacity of offices and employments. Hayward.

Am I distinguish'd from you but by toils, Superior toils, and heavier weight of cares? Painful preeminence! Addison.

3. Superiority of power or influence.

That which standeth on record, hath preeminence above that which passeth from hand to hand, and hath no pens but the tongues, no book but the ears of men. Hooker.

Beyond the equator, the southern point of the needle is sovereign, and the north submits his preeminence. Brown.

PREEMINENT. adj. [preeminent, Fr. pre and eminent.] Excellent above others.

Tell how came I here? by some great maker In goodness and in power preeminent. Milton.

We claim a proper interest above others, in the preeminent rights of the household of faith. Spratt.

PREEPTION. n. s. [præemptio, Latin.]

The right of purchasing before another. Certain persons, in the reigns of king Edward VI. and queen Mary, sought to make use of this preemption, but, crossed in the prosecution, or defeated in their expectation, gave it over. Carew.

TO PREEN. v. a. [prinen, Dutch, to dress or prank up.] To trim the feathers of birds, to enable them to glide through the air: for this use nature has furnished them with two peculiar glands, which secrete an unctuous matter into a perforated oil bag, out of which the bird draws it with its bill. Bailey.

TO PREENGAGE. v. a. [pre and engage.] To engage by precedent ties or contracts.

To Cipsus by his friends his suit he mov'd, But he was preengag'd by former ties. Dryden.

Not only made an instrument; But preengag'd without my own consent. Dryden.

The world has the unhappy advantage of preengaging our passions, at a time when we have not reflection enough to look beyond the instrument to the hand whose direction it obeys. Rogers.

PREENGAGEMENT. n. s. [from preengage.]

Precedent obligation. My preengagements to other themes were not unknown to those for whom I was to write. Boyle.

The opinions, suited to their respective tempers, will make way to their assent, in spite of accidental preengagements. Glanville.

Men are apt to think, that those obediences they pay to God shall, like a preengagement, disannul all after-contracts made by guilt. Decay of Piety.

As far as opportunity and former preengagements will give leave. Collier.

TO PREESTABLISH. v. a. [pre and establish.]

To settle beforehand. The opinions, suited to their respective tempers, will make way to their assent, in spite of accidental preengagements. Glanville.

PREESTABLISHMENT. n. s. [from preestablish.] Settlement beforehand.

TO PREEXIST. v. a. [præ and existo, Lat.]

To exist beforehand. If thy preexisting soul Was form'd at first with myriads more, It did through all the mighty poets roll. Dryden.

PREEEXISTENCE. n. s. [preexistence, Fr. from preexist.]

1. Existence before.

Wisdom declares her antiquity and preexistence to all the works of this earth. Burnet.

2. Existence of the soul before its union with the body.

As Simonides has exposed the vicious part of women, from the doctrine of preexistence; some of the ancient philosophers have satirized the vicious part of the human species, from a notion of the soul's postexistence. Addison.

PREEEXISTENT. adj. [preexistent, Fr. pre and existent.] Existent beforehand; preceding in existence.

Artificial things could not be from eternity, because they suppose man, by whose art they were made, preexistent to them; the workman must be before the work. Burnet.

Blind to former, as to future fate, What mortal knows his preexistent state? Pope.

If this preexistent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, then some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley.

PREFACE. n. s. [preface, Fr. præfatio, Lat.] Something spoken introductory to the main design; introduction; something proemial.

This superficial tale Is but a preface to her worthy praise. Shaksp.

Sir Thomas More betrayed his depth of judgment in state affairs in his Utopia, than which, in the opinion of Budæus in a preface before it, our age hath not seen a thing more deep. Milton.

Heav'n's high behest no preface needs. Milton.

TO PREFACE. v. n. [præfari, Latin.] To say something introductory.

Before I enter upon the particular parts of her character, it is necessary to preface, that she is the only child of a decrepid father. Speclator.

TO PREFACE. v. a.

1. To introduce by something proemial. Wherefoe'er he gave an admonition, he prefaced it always with such demonstrations of tenderness. Fell.

Thou art rash, And must be prefac'd into government. Southey.

2. To face; to cover. A ludicrous sense. I love to wear clothes that are flush, Not prefacing old rags with plush. Cleaveland.

PREFACER. n. s. [from preface.] The writer of a preface.

If there be not a tolerable line in all these six, the prefacer gave me no occasion to write better. Dryden.

PREFATORY. adj. [from preface.] Introductory.

If this proposition, whosoever will be saved, be restrained only to those to whom it was intended, the christians, then the anathema reaches not the heathens, who had never heard of Christ: after all, I am far from blaming even that prefatory addition to the creed. Dryden.

PREFECT. n. s. [præfectus, Lat.] Governor; commander.

He is much The better soldier, having been a tribune, Prefect, lieutenant, prætor in the war. Ben Jonson.

It was the custom in the Roman empire, for the prefects and viceroys of distant provinces to transmit a relation of every thing remarkable in their administration. Addison.

PREFECTURE. n. s. [præfectura, Latin.] Command; office of government.

TO PREFER. v. a. [preferer, Fr. præfero, Latin.]

1. To regard more than another.

With brotherly love, in honour prefer one another. Romans.

2. With above before the thing postponed.

If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy. Psalms.

3. With before.

He that cometh after me, is preferred before me; for he was before me. John.

It may worthily seem unto you a most shameful thing, to have preferred an infamous peace before a most just war. Knolles.

O spirit, that dost prefer Before all temples th' upright heart. Milton.

The greater good is to be preferred before the less, and the lesser evil to be endured rather than the greater. Wilems.

4. With to.

Would he rather leave this frantick scene, And trees and beasts prefer to courts and men? Pr.

5. To advance; to exalt; to raise.

PRE

- By the recommendation of the earl of Dunbar, he was prefer'd to the bishoprick of Coventry and Lichfield. Clarendon.
6. To present ceremoniously. This seems not a proper use.
He spake, and to her hand prefer'd the bowl. Pope.
7. To offer solemnly; to propose publicly; to exhibit.
They flatly disavouch
To yield him more obedience or support;
And as if a perjured duke of Lancaster,
Their cartel of defiance they prefer. Daniel.
I, when my soul began to faint,
My vows and prayers to thee prefer'd;
The lord my passionate complaint,
Even from his holy temple, heard. Sandys.
Prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments since the conquest; and if that won't do, challenge the crown and the two houses. Collier.
Take care,
Lest thou prefer so rash a pray'r;
Nor vainly hope the queen of love
Will e'er thy fav'rite's charms improve. Prior.
Every person within the church or commonwealth may prefer an accusation, that the delinquent may suffer condign punishment. Ayliffe.
- PREFERABLE. adj. [preferable, Fr. from prefer.] Eligible before something else.
With to commonly before the thing refused.
The stronger ties we have to an unalterable pursuit of happiness, which is greatest good, the more are we free from any necessary compliance with our desire, set upon any particular, and then appearing preferable good, till we have duly examined it. Locke.
Though it be incumbent on parents to provide for their children, yet this debt to their children does not quite cancel the score due to their parents; but only is made by nature preferable to it. Locke.
Almost every man in our nation is a politician, and hath a scheme of his own, which he thinks preferable to that of any other. Addison.
Even in such a state as this, the pleasures of virtue would be superior to those of vice, and justly preferable. Atterbury.
- PREFERABLENESS. n. s. [from preferable.] The state of being preferable.
- PREFERABLY. adv. [from preferable.] In preference; in such a manner as to prefer one thing to another.
How came he to chuse a comick preferably to the tragick poets; or how comes he to chuse Plautus preferably to Terence? Dennis.
- PREFERENCE. n. s. [preference, Fr. from prefer.] 1. The act of preferring; estimation of one thing above another; election of one rather than another.
It gives as much due to good works, as is consistent with the grace of the gospel; it gives as much preference to divine grace, as is consistent with the precepts of the gospel. Spratt.
Leave the criticks on either side, to contend about the preference due to this or that sort of poetry. Dryden.
We find in ourselves a power to begin or forbear several actions of our minds and motions of our bodies, barely by a thought or preference of the mind, ordering the doing, or not doing such a particular action. Locke.
The several musical instruments in the hands of the Apollos, Muses, and Fauns, might give light to the dispute for preference between the ancient and modern music. Addison.
A secret pleasure touch'd Athena's soul,
To see the preference due to sacred age Regarded. Pope.
The Romanists were used to value the latter equally with the former, or even to give them the preference. Waterland.
2. With to before the thing postponed.
This passes with his soft admirers, and gives him the preference to Virgil. Dryden.
It directs one, in preference to, or with neglect

PRE

- of the other, and thereby either the continuation or change becomes voluntary. Locke.
3. With above.
I shall give an account of some of those appropriate and discriminating notices wherein the human body differs, and hath preference above the most perfect brutal nature. Hale.
4. With before.
Herein is evident the visible discrimination between the human nature, and its preference before it. Hale.
5. With over.
The knowledge of things alone gives a value to our reasonings, and preference to one man's knowledge over another. Locke.
- PREREMENT. n. s. [from prefer.] 1. Advancement to a higher station.
I'll move the king
To any shape of thy prerement, such As thou'lt desire. Shakspeare.
If you hear of that blind traitor,
Prerement falls on him that cuts him off. Shakspeare.
Princes must, by a vigorous exercise of that law, make it every man's interest and honour to cultivate religion and virtue, by rendering vice a disgrace, and the certain ruin to prerement or pretensions. Swift.
2. A place of honour or profit.
All prerements should be placed upon fit men. L'Estrange.
The mercenary and inconstant crew of the hunters after prerement, whose designs are always seen through. Davenant.
3. Preference; act of preferring. Not in use.
All which declare a natural prerement of the one unto the motion before the other. Brown.
- PREFERER. n. s. [from prefer.] One who prefers.
- TO PREFIGURATE. v. a. [præ and figuro, Lat.] To show by an antecedent representation.
- PREFIGURATION. n. s. [from prefigurare.] Antecedent representation.
The same providence that hath wrought the one, will work the other; the former being pledges, as well as prefigurations of the latter. Burnet.
The variety of prophecies and prefigurations had their punctual accomplishment in the author of this institution. Norris.
- TO PREFIGURE. v. a. [præ and figuro, Lat.] To exhibit by antecedent representation.
What the Old Testament hath, the very same the New containeth; but that which lieth there, as under a shadow, is here brought forth into the open sun; things there prefigured, are here performed. Hooker.
Such piety, so chaste use of God's day,
That what we turn to feast, she turn'd to pray,
And did prefigure here in devout taste,
The rest of her high sabbath, which shall last. Donne.
If shame superadded to loss, and both met together, as the sinners portion here, perfectly prefiguring the two saddest ingredients in hell, deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face, cannot prove efficacious to the mortifying of vice, the church doth give over the patient. Hammond.
- TO PRE'FINE. v. a. [prefinir, Fr. præfinio, Lat.] To limit beforehand.
He, in his immoderate desires, prefin'd unto himself three years, which the great monarchs of Rome could not perform in so many hundreds. Knolles.
- TO PREFIX. v. a. [præfigo, Latin.] 1. To appoint beforehand.
At the prefix'd hour of her awaking,
Came I to take her from her kindred's vault. Shakspeare.
A time prefix, and think of me at last! Sandys.
Its inundation constantly increaseth the seventh day of June; wherein a larger form of speech were safer, than that which punctually prefixeth a constant day. Brown.
Booth's forward valour only serv'd to show,
He durst that duty pay we all did owe;

PRE

- Th' attempt was fair; but heaven's prefixed hour
Not come. Dryden.
2. To settle; to establish.
Because I would prefix some certain boundary between them, the old statutes end with king Edward II. the new or later statutes begin with king Edward III. Hale.
These boundaries of species are as men, and not as nature makes them, if there are in nature any such prefixed bounds. Locke.
3. To put before another thing: as, he prefixed an advertisement to his book.
- PREFI'X. n. s. [præfixum, Lat.] Some particle put before a word, to vary its signification.
In the Hebrew language the noun has its prefixæ and affixa, the former to signify some few relations, and the latter to denote the pronouns possessive and relative. Clarke.
It is a prefix of augmentation to many words in that language. Brown.
- PREFI'XION. n. s. [prefixion, Fr. from prefix.] The act of prefixing.
- TO PREFO'RM. v. a. [pre and form.] To form beforehand. Not in use.
If you consider the true cause,
Why all these things change, from their ordinance,
Their natures and performed faculties,
To monstrous quality; why you shall find,
That heav'n made them instruments of fear Unto some monstrous state. Shakspeare.
- PREGNANCY. n. s. [from pregnant.] 1. The state of being with young.
The breast in encompassed with ribs, and the belly left free, for respiration; and in females, for that extraordinary extension in the time of their pregnancy. Ray.
2. Fertility; fruitfulness; inventive power; acuteness.
He was sent to school, where his pregnancy was advantaged by more than paternal care and industry. Fell.
Pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings. Shakspeare.
This writer, out of the pregnancy of his invention, hath found out an old way of insinuating the grossest reflections under the appearance of admonitions. Swift.
- PREGNANT. adj. [pregnant, Fr. prægnans, Latin.] 1. Teeming; breeding.
Thou
Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss,
And mad'st it pregnant. Milton.
His town, as some reports, was built of old
By Danae, pregnant with almighty gold. Dryden.
Through either ocean, foolish man!
That pregnant word sent forth again,
Might to a world extend each atom there,
For every drop call forth a sea, a heav'n for ev'ry star. Prior.
2. Fruitful; fertile; impregnating.
All these in their pregnant causes mixt. Milton.
Call the floods from high, to rush amain,
With pregnant streams, to swell the teeming grain. Dryden.
3. Full of consequence.
These knew not the just motives and pregnant grounds, with which I thought myself furnished. King Charles.
An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity. Woodward.
O detestable passive obedience! did I ever imagine I should become thy votary in so pregnant an instance? Arbutnot.
4. Evident; plain; clear; full. An obsolete sense.
This granted, as it is a most pregnant and unforc'd position, who stands so eminent in the degree of this fortune as Cassio, a knave very voluble? Shakspeare.
Were't not that we stand up against them all,
'Twere pregnant, they should square between themselves. Shakspeare.
5. Easy to produce any thing.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakspeare.

6. Free; kind. Obsolete.
My matter hath no voice, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear. Shakspeare.

PREGNANTLY. adv. [from pregnant.]
1. Fruitfully.
2. Fully; plainly; clearly.
A thousand moral paintings I can shew,
That shall demonstrate these quick blows of fortune
More pregnantly than words. Shakspeare.
The dignity of this office among the Jews is so pregnantly set forth in holy writ, that it is unquestionable; kings and priests are mentioned together. South.

PREGUSTATION. n. s. [præ and gusto,
Lat.] The act of tasting before another.

TO PREJU'DGE. v. a. [prejurer, Fr.
præ and judico, Lat.] To determine any question beforehand; generally to condemn beforehand.
If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemn'd in parliament, and prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, and that it tended to the disinherison of the line of York. Bacon.
The child was strong and able, though born in the eighth month, which the physicians do prejudge. Bacon.
The cause is not to be defended, or patronized by names, but arguments, much less to be prejudged, or blasted by them. Hammond.
The committee of council hath prejudged the whole case, by calling the united sense of both houses of parliament an universal clamour. Swift.
Some action ought to be entered, lest a greater cause should be injured and prejudged thereby. Ayliffe.

TO PREJU'DICATE. v. a. [præ and judico, Latin.] To determine beforehand to disadvantage.
Our dearest friend
Prejudicates the business, and would seem
To have us make denial. Shakspeare.
Are you, in favour of his person, bent
Thus to prejudicate the innocent? Sandys.

PREJU'DICATE. adj. [from the verb.]
1. Formed by prejudice; formed before examination.
This rule of casting away all our former prejudi- cate opinions, is not proposed to any of us to be practised at once as subjects or christians, but merely as philosophers. Watts.
2. Prejudiced; prepossessed by opinions.
Their works will be embraced by most that understand them, and their reasons enforce belief from prejudicate readers. Brown.

PREJUDICATION. n. s. [from prejudicate.]
The act of judging without examination.

PREJUDICE. n. s. [prejudice, Fr. prejudi- cium, Lat.]
1. Prepossession; judgment formed beforehand without examination. It is used for prepossession in favour of any thing or against it. It is sometimes used with to before that which the prejudice is against, but not properly.
The king himself frequently considered more the person who spoke, as he was in his prejudice, than the counsel itself that was given. Clarendon.
My comfort is, that their manifest prejudice to my cause will render their judgment of less authority. Dryden.
There is an unaccountable prejudice to projectors of all kinds, for which reason, when I talk of practising to fly, silly people think me an owl for my pains. Addison.
2. Mischief; detriment; hurt; injury.
This sense is only accidental or consequential; a bad thing being called a prejudice, only because prejudice is commonly a bad thing, and is not derived from the original or etymology of the word: it were therefore better to use it less: perhaps prejudice ought never to be applied to any mischief, which does not imply some partiality or prepossession.

In some of the following examples, its propriety will be discovered.
I have not spake one the least word,
That might be prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person. Shakspeare.
England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakspeare.
Factions carried too high and too violently, is a sign of weakness in princes, and much to the prejudice of their authority and business. Bacon.
How plain this abuse is, and what prejudice it does to the understanding of the sacred scriptures. Locke.
A prince of this character will instruct us by his example, to fix the unsteadiness of our politics; or by his conduct hinder it from doing us any prejudice.
Addison.

TO PREJUDICE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To prepossess with unexamined opinions; to fill with prejudices.
Half pillars wanted their expected height,
And roots imperfect prejudic'd the sight. Prior.
Suffer not any beloved study to prejudice your mind, so far as to despise all other learning. Watts.
2. To obstruct or injure by prejudices previously raised.
Companies of learned men, be they never so great and reverend, are to yield unto reason; the weight whereof is no whit prejudiced by the simplicity of his person, which doth allege it. Hooker.
Neither must his example, done without the book,
prejudice that which is well appointing in the book.
Whitgift.
I am not to prejudice the cause of my fellow-poets, though I abandon my own defence. Dryden.
3. To injure; to hurt; to diminish; to impair; to be detrimental to. This sense, as in the noun, is often improperly extended to meanings that have no relation to the original sense; who can read with patience of an ingredient that prejudices a medicine?
The strength of that law is such, that no particular nation can lawfully prejudice the same by any their several laws and ordinances, more than a man by his private resolutions, the law of the whole commonwealth wherein he liveth. Hooker.
The Danube rescu'd, and the empire sav'd,
Say, is the majesty of verse retriev'd?
And would it prejudice thy softer vein,
To sing the princes, Louis and Eugene? Prior.
To this is added a vinous bitter, warmer in the composition of its ingredients than the watry infusion; and, as gentian and lemon-peel make a bitter of so grateful a flavour, the only care required in this composition was to chuse such an addition as might not prejudice it. London Dispensatory.

PREJUDICIAL. adj. [prejudicible, French;
from prejudice.]
1. Obstructed by means of opposite pre-possession.
'Tis a sad irreverence, without due consideration to look upon the actions of princes with a prejudicial
eye. Holyday.
2. Contrary; opposite.
What one syllable is there, in all this, prejudicial
any way to that which we hold? Hooker.
3. Mischievous; hurtful; injurious; detrimental. This sense is improper. See PREJUDICE, noun and verb.
His going away the next morning with all his troops, was most prejudicial and most ruinous to the king's affairs. Clarendon.
One of the young ladies reads, while the others are at work; so that the learning of the family is not at all prejudicial to its manufactures. Addison's Guardian.
A state of great prosperity, as it exposes us to various temptations, so it is often prejudicial to us in that it swells the mind with undue thoughts. Atterbury.

PREJUDICIALNESS. n. s. [from prejudi- cial.] The state of being prejudicial;
mischievousness.

PRELACY. n. s. [from prelate.]
1. The dignity or post of a prelate or ecclesiastick of the highest order.
Prelacies may be termed the greater benefices; as that of the pontificate, a patriarchship, an arch-bishoprick and bishoprick. Ayliffe.
2. Episcopacy; the order of bishops.
The presbyter, puff'd up with spiritual pride,
Shall on the necks of the lewd nobles ride,
His brethren damn, the civil power defy,
And parcel out republick prelacy. Dryden.
How many are there, that call themselves protestants, who put prelacy and popery together as terms convertible? Swift.
3. Bishops. Collectively.
Divers of the reverend prelacy, and other most judicious men, have especially bestowed their pains about the matter of jurisdiction. Hooker.

PRELATE. n. s. [prelat, Fr. prælatus, Lat.] An ecclesiastick of the highest order and dignity.
It becomed not the person of so grave a prelate, to be either utterly without counsel, as the rest were,
or in a common perplexity to shew himself alone secure. Hooker.
Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all-admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire the king were made a prelate.
Shakspeare.
The archbishop of Vienna, a reverend prelate, said one day to king Lewis XI. of France; Sir, your mortal enemy is dead, what time duke Charles of Burgundy was slain. Bacon.
Yet Munster's prelate ever be accurst,
In whom we seek the German faith in vain. Dryd.

PRELATICAL. adj. [from prelate.] Relating to prelates or prelacy. Diç.

PRELATION. n. s. [prælatus, Lat.] Preference; setting of one above the other.
In case the father left only daughters, they equally succeeded as in co-partnership, without any prelation or preference of the eldest daughter to a double portion. Hale.

PRELATURE. n. s. [prælatura, Lat.]
PRELATURESHIP. n. s. [prælature, French.]
The state or dignity of a prelate. Diç.

PRELECTION. n. s. [prælectio, Latin.]
Reading; lecture; discourse.
He that is desirous to prosecute these prælectata or infinity, let him resort to the prelections of Faber.
Hale.

PRELIBATION. n. s. [from prælibo, Lat.] Taste beforehand; effusion previous to tasting.
The firm belief of this, in an innocent soul, is a high prelibation of those eternal joys. More.

PRELIMINARY. adj. [preliminaire, Fr. præ- limine, Latin.] Previous; introductory;
proemial.
My master needed not the assistance of that preliminary poet to prove his claim; his own majestick mien discovers him to be the king. Dryden.

PRELIMINARY. n. s. Something previous;
preparatory act; preparation; preparative.
The third consists of the ceremonies of the oath on both sides, and the preliminaries to the combat.
Notes on Iliad.

PRELUDE. n. s. [prelude, Fr. præledium,
Lat.]
1. Some short flight of musick played before a full concert.
My weak essay
But sounds a prelude, and points out their prey. Young.

PRE

2. Something introductory; something that only shows what is to follow.

To his infant arms oppose
His father's rebels and his brother's foes;
Those were the preludes of his fate,
That form'd his manhood, to subdue
The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew.

Dryden.

The last Georgick was a good prelude to the Æneis, and very well shewed what the poet could do in the description of what was really great.

Addison.

One concession to a man is but a prelude to another.

Clarissa.

To PRELU'DE. v. a. [preluder, Fr. præludo, Lat.] To serve as an introduction; to be previous to.

Either songster holding out their throats,
And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes,
As if all day, preluding to the fight,
They only had rehears'd, to sing by night.

Dryden.

PRELU'DIOUS. adj. [from prelude.] Previous; introductory.

That's but a preludious bliss,
Two souls pickering in a kiss.

Cleaveland.

PRELU'DIUM. n. s. [Latin.] Prelude.

This Menelaus knows, expos'd to share
With me the rough preludium of the war.

Dryden.

PRELU'SIVE. adj. [from prelude.] Previous;
introductory; proemial.

The clouds

Softly shaking on the dimpled pool

Prelusive drops, let all their moisture flow.

Thomson.

PREMATU'RE. adj. [premature, French;
præmaturus, Lat.] Ripe too soon; formed before the time; too early; too soon said, believed, or done; too hasty.

'Tis hard to imagine, what possible consideration should persuade him to repent, till he deposited that premature persuasion of his being in Christ.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

PREMATU'RELY. adv. [from premature.] Too early; too soon; with too hasty ripeness.

PREMATU'RENESS. } n. s. [from prema- PREMATU'RITY. } ture.] Too great haste; unseasonable earliness.

To PREME'DITATE. v. a. [præmeditor, Lat. præmediter, Fr.] To contrive or form beforehand; to conceive beforehand.

Where I have come, great clerks have purposed
To greet me with præmeditated welcomes.

Shakspeare.

With words præmeditated thus he said.

Dryden.

To PREME'DITATE. v. n. To have formed in the mind by previous meditation; to think beforehand.

Of themselves they were rude, and knew not so much as how to præmeditate; the spirit gave them speech and eloquent utterance.

Hooker.

PREMEDITATION. n. s. [præmeditatio,
Lat. præmeditation, Fr. from præmeditate.]
Act of meditating beforehand.

Are all th' unlook'd-for issue of their bodies
To take their rooms ere I can place myself?
A cold præmeditation for my purpose!

Shakspeare.

Hope is a pleasant præmeditation of enjoyment, as when a dog expects, till his master has done picking of the bone.

More.

He amidst the disadvantages of extempore against præmeditation, dispelled with ease and perfect clearness all the sophisms that had been brought against him.

Fell.

Verse is not the effect of sudden thought; but this hinders not, that sudden thought may be represented in verse, since those thoughts must be higher than nature can raise without præmeditation.

Dryden.

To PREMERIT. v. a. [præmereor, Lat.]
To deserve before.

They did not forgive sir John Hotham, who had so much premerited of them.

King Charles.

PREMICES. n. s. [primitiæ, Lat. premisses, Fr.] First fruits.

PRE

A charger, yearly filled with fruits, was offered to the gods at their festivals, as the premisses or first gatherings.

Dryden.

PREMIER. adj. [French.] First; chief.

The Spaniard challengeth the premier place, in regard of his dominions.

Camden.

Thus families, like realms, with equal fate,
Are sunk by premier ministers of state.

Swift.

To PREMI'SE. v. a. [præmissus, Latin.]

1. To explain previously; to lay down premises.

The apostle's discourse here is an answer upon a ground taken; he premisseth, and then infers.

Burnet.

I premise these particulars, that the reader may know I enter upon it as a very ungrateful task.

Addison.

2. To send before the time. Not in use.

O let the vile world end,

And the premisses flames of the last day
Knit earth and heav'n together!

Shakspeare.

PREMISES. n. s. [præmissa, Lat. premisses,
French.]

1. Propositions antecedently supposed or proved.

They infer upon the premisses, that as great difference as commodiously may be, there should be in all outward ceremonies between the people of God, and them which are not his people.

Hooker.

This is so regular an inference, that whilst the premisses stand firm, it is impossible to shake the conclusion.

Decay of Piety.

She study'd well the point, and found

Her foes conclusions were not found,

From premisses erroneous brought,

And therefore the deduction's nought.

Swift.

2. In law language, houses or lands: as, I was upon the premisses.

PRE'MISS. n. s. [præmissum, Lat.] Antecedent proposition. This word is rare in the singular.

They know the major or minor, which is implied, when you pronounce the other premiss and the conclusion.

Watts.

PREMIUM. n. s. [præmium, Lat.] Something given to invite a loan or a bargain.

No body cares to make loans upon a new project;
whereas men never fail to bring in their money upon a land-tax, when the premium or interest allowed them is suited to the hazard they run.

Addison.

People were tempted to lend, by great premiums
and large interest; and it concerned them to preserve that government, which they had trusted with their money.

Swift.

To PREMO'NISH. v. a. [præmonere, Lat.]

To warn or admonish beforehand.

PREMO'NISHMENT. n. s. [from præmonish.]
Previous information.

After these præmonishments, I will come to the compartition itself.

Wotton.

PREMONITION. n. s. [from præmonish.]
Previous notice; previous intelligence.

What friendly præmonitions have been spent

On your forbearance, and their vain event.

Chapm.

How great the force of such an erroneous persuasion is, we may collect from our Saviour's præmoni- tion to his disciples, when he tells them, that those who killed them should think they did God service.

Decay of Piety.

PREMO'NITORY. adj. [from præ and monere, Lat.] Previously advising.

To PREMO'NSTRATE. v. a. [præ and monstro, Lat.] To show beforehand.

PREMUNIRE. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A writ in the common law, whereby a penalty is incurable, as infringing some statute.

Premunire is now grown a good word in our English laws, by tract of time; and yet at first it was merely mistaken for premonere.

Bramhall.

2. A penalty incurred.

Woolsey incurred a premunire, forfeited his honour, estate, and life, which he ended in great calamity.

South.

PRE

3. A difficulty; a distress. A low ungrammatical word.

PREMUNITION. n. s. [from præmunio,
Lat.] An anticipation of objection.

To PRENO'MINATE. v. a. [præ and nomino, Latin.] To forename.

He you would sound,

Having ever seen, in the prænominate crimes,

The youth, you breathe of, guilty.

Shakspeare.

PRENOMINATION. n. s. [præ and nomino, Latin.] The privilege of being named first.

The watry productions should have the prænomi- nation; and they of the land rather derive their names, than nominate those of the sea.

Brown.

PRENO'TION. n. s. [prænotion, Fr. præ and nosco, Lat.] Foreknowledge; prescience.

The hedgehog's presension of winds is so exact, that it stoppeth the north or southern hole of its nest, according unto prænotion of these winds ensuing.

Brown.

PRE'NTICE. n. s. [contracted by colloquial licence, from apprentice.] One bound to a master, in order to instruction in a trade.

My accuser is my prentice, and when I did correct him for his fault, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me.

Shakspeare.

PRE'NTICESHIP. n. s. [from prentice.]
The servitude of an apprentice.

He serv'd a prenticeship, who sets up shop,

Ward try'd on puppies, and the poor, his drop.

Pope.

PRONUNCIATION. n. s. [prænnuncio, Lat.]
The act of telling before.

DiC.

PREOCCUPANCY. n. s. [from preoccupate.]
The act of taking possession before another.

To PREOCCUPATE. v. a. [preoccupar,
Fr. præoccupo, Lat.]

1. To anticipate.

Honour aspireth to death; grief flieth to it; and fear preoccupieth it.

Bacon.

2. To prepossess; to fill with prejudices.

That the model be plain without colours, lest the eye preoccupate the judgment.

Wotton.

PREOCCUPATION. n. s. [preoccupation,
Fr. from preoccupate.]

1. Anticipation.

2. Prepossession.

3. Anticipation of objection.

As if, by way of preoccupation, he should have said; well, here you see your commission; this is your duty, these are your discouragements; never seek for evasions from worldly afflictions; this is your reward, if you perform it; this is your doom, if you decline it.

South.

To PREOCCUPY. v. a. To prepossess;
to occupy by anticipation or prejudices.

I think it more respectful to the reader to leave something to reflections, than preoccupy his judgment.

Arbutnot.

To PREO'MINATE. v. a. [præ and ominor, Lat.] To prognosticate; to gather from omens any future event.

Because many ravens were seen when Alexander entered Babylon, they were thought to præminate his death.

Brown.

PREOPI'NION. n. s. [præ and opinion, Lat.]
Opinion antecedently formed; prepossession.

Diet holds no solid rule of selection; some, in indistinct voracity, eating almost any; others, out of a timorous preopinion, refraining from very many things.

Brown.

To PREORDA'IN. v. a. [præ and ordain.]
To ordain beforehand.

Sin is the contrariety to the will of God, and if all things be preordained by God, and so demonstrated to be willed by him, it remains there is no such thing as sin.

Hammond.

PRE

Few souls preordain'd by fate,
The race of gods have reach'd that envy'd state.

Roscommon.

PREORDINANCE. n. f. [pre and ordinance.] Antecedent decree; first decree. Not in use.

These lowly courtesies
Might stir the blood of ordinary men,
And turn preordain'd and first decree
Into the law of children.

Shakspeare.

PREORDINATION. n. f. [from preordain.] The act of preordaining.

PREPARATION. n. f. [preparatio, Latin; preparation, Fr. from prepare.]

1. The act of preparing or previously fitting any thing to any purpose.

Nothing hath proved more fatal to that due preparation for another life, than our unhappy mistake of the nature and end of this.

Wake.

2. Previous measures.

I will shew what preparations there were in nature for this dissolution, and after what manner it came to pass.

Burnet.

3. Ceremonious introduction.

I make bold to press, with so little preparation, upon you.

—You're welcome.

Shakspeare.

4. The act of making or fitting by a regular process.

In the preparations of cookery, the most volatile parts of vegetables are destroyed.

Arbutnot.

5. Any thing made by process of operation.

I with the chymists had been more sparing, who magnify their preparations, inveigle the curiosity of many, and delude the security of most.

Brown.

6. Accomplishment; qualification. Out of use.

Sir John, you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, authentick in your place and person, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike, and learned preparations.

Shakspeare.

PREPARATIVE. adj. [preparatif, French; from prepare.] Having the power of preparing, qualifying, or fitting.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work?

South.

PREPARATIVE. n. f. [preparatif, Fr. from prepare.]

1. That which has the power of preparing or previously fitting.

They tell us the profit of reading is singular, in that it serveth for a preparative unto sermons.

Hooker.

My book of advancement of learning may be some preparative or key for the better opening of the instauration.

Bacon.

Resolvedness in sin can, with no reason, be imagined a preparative to remission.

Though he judged the time of sickness an improper season for the great work of repentance;
yet he esteemed it a most useful preparative, the voice of God himself exhorting to it.

Fell.

Such a temper is a contradiction to repentance,
as being founded in the destruction of those qualities, which are the only dispositions and preparatives to it.

South.

2. That which is done in order to something else.

The miseries, which have ensued, may be yet, through thy mercy, preparatives to us of future blessings.

King Charles.

What avails it to make all the necessary preparatives for our voyage, if we do not actually begin the journey?

Dryden.

PREPARATIVELY. adv. [from preparative.] Previously; by way of preparation.

It is preparatively necessary to many useful things in this life, as to make a man a good physician.

Hale.

PREPARATORY. adj. [preparatoire, Fr.]

1. Antecedently necessary.

The practice of all these is proper to our condition

PRE

in this world, and preparatory to our happiness in the next.

Tillotson.

2. Introductory; previous; antecedent.

Preparatory, limited and formal interrogatories in writing preclude this way of occasional interrogatories.

Hale.

Rains were but preparatory, the violence of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss.

Burnet.

TO PREPARE. v. a. [præparo, Latin; preparer, French.]

1. To fit for any thing; to adjust to any use; to make ready for any purpose.

Patient Octavia, plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails.

Shakspeare.

Prepare men's hearts by giving them the grace of humility, repentance, and probity of heart.

Hammond.

Confound the peace establish'd, and prepare
Their souls to hatred, and their hands to war.

Dryden.

Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,
Till doomsday wander in the shades of night.

Dryden.

The beams of light had been in vain display'd,
Had not the eye been fit for vision made;
In vain the author had the eye prepar'd
With so much skill, had not the light appear'd.

Blackmore.

2. To qualify for any purpose.

Some preachers, being only prepared upon two or three points of doctrine, run the same round.

Addis.

3. To make ready beforehand.

There he maketh the hungry to dwell, that they may prepare a city for habitation.

Psalms.

Now prepare thee for another fight.

Milton.

He took the golden compasses, prepar'd
In God's eternal store, to circumscribe
This universe.

Milton.

4. To form; to make.

He hath founded it upon the seas, and prepared it upon the floods.

Psalms.

5. To make by regular process: as, he prepared a medicine.

TO PREPARE. v. n.

1. To take previous measures.

Efficacy is a power of speech, which represents to our minds the lively ideas of things so truly, as if we saw them with our eyes; as Dido preparing to kill herself.

Peacbam.

2. To make every thing ready; to put things in order.

Go in, sirrah, bid them prepare for dinner.

Shakspeare.

The long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing.

1 Peter.

3. To make one's self ready; to put himself in a state of expectation.

PREPARE. n. f. [from the verb.] Preparation; previous measures. Not in use.

In our behalf

Golevy men, and make prepare for war.

Shaksp.

PREPAR'EDLY. adv. [from prepare.] By proper precedent measures.

She preparedly may frame herself
To th' way she's forc'd to.

Shakspeare.

PREPAR'EDNESS. n. f. [from prepare.] State or act of being prepared: as, he is in a preparedness for his final exit.

PREPAR'ER. n. f. [from prepare.]

1. One that prepares; one that previously fits.

The bishop of Ely, the fittest preparer of her mind to receive such a doleful accident, came to visit her.

Wotton.

2. That which fits for any thing.

Codded grains are an improver of land, and preparer of it for other crops.

Mortimer.

PREPENSE. } adj. [prepensus, Latin.]

PREPENSED. } Forethought; preconceived; contrived beforehand; as, malice
prepenfe.

PRE

TO PREPONDER. v. a. [from preponderate.]

To outweigh. Not used.

Though pillars by channelling be seemingly ingrossed to our sight, yet they are truly weakened; and therefore ought not to be the more slender, but the more corpulent, unless appearances preponder truths.

Wotton.

PREPONDERANCE. } n. f. [from prepon- PREPONDERANCY. } derate.] The state of outweighing; superiority of weight.

As to addition of ponderosity in dead bodies, comparing them unto blocks, this occasional prepon- derancy is rather an appearance than reality.

Brown.

The mind should examine all the grounds of probability, and, upon a due balancing the whole, reject or receive proportionably to the preponderancy
of the greater grounds of probability.

Locke.

Little light boats were the ships which people used, to the sides whereof this fish remora fastening, might make it swag, as the least preponderance on either side will do, and so retard its course.

Greuv.

TO PREPONDERATE. v. a. [præpon- dero, Latin.]

1. To outweigh; to overpower by weight.

An inconsiderable weight, by distance from the centre of the balance, will preponderate greater magnitudes.

Glanville.

The triviallest thing, when a passion is cast into the scale with it, preponderates substantial blessings.

Government of the Tongue.

2. To overpower by stronger influence.

TO PREPONDERATE. v. n.

1. To exceed in weight.

That is no just balance, wherein the heaviest side will not preponderate.

Wilkins.

He that will make the lighter scale preponderate, will not so soon do it, by adding new weight to the emptier, as if he took out of the heavier, what he adds to the lighter.

Locks.

Unless the very mathematical center of gravity of every system be fixed in the very mathematical center of the attractive power of all the rest, they cannot be evenly attracted on all sides, but must preponderate some way or other.

Bentley.

2. To exceed in influence or power analogous to weight.

In matters of probability, we cannot be sure that we have all particulars before us, and that there is no evidence behind, which may outweigh all that at present seems to preponderate with us.

Locke.

By putting every argument on one side and the other into the balance we must form a judgment which side preponderates.

Watts.

PREPONDERATION. n. f. [from preponde- rate.] The act or state of outweighing
any thing.

In matters, which require present practice, we must content ourselves with a mere preponderation of probable reasons.

Watts.

TO PREPOSE. v. a. [proposer, Fr. præpono, Lat.] To put before.

Diſt.

PREPOSITION. n. f. [præposition, French; præpositio, Latin.] In grammar, a particle governing a case.

A preposition signifies some relation, which the thing signified by the word following it, has to something going before in the discourse; as, Caesar came to Rome.

Clarke.

PREPO'SITOR. n. f. [præpositor, Latin.] A scholar appointed by the master to overlook the rest.

TO PREPOSSESS. v. a. [pre and possess.]

To fill with an opinion unexamined; to prejudice.

She was preposseſſed with the scandal of salivation.

Wifem.

PREPOSSE'SSION. n. f. [from preposseſſes.]

1. Preoccupation; first possession.

God hath taken care to anticipate and prevent every man to give piety the prepossession, before other competitors should be able to pretend to him; and so to engage him in holiness first, and then in bli-

Hammon.

2. Prejudice; preconceived opinion.

Had the poor vulgar rout only, who were held under the prejudices and prepossessions of education, been abused into such idolatrous superstitions, it might have been pitied, but not so much wondered at. South.

With thought, from prepossession free, reflect
On solar rays, as they the light respect. Blackmore.

PREPOSTEROUS. adj. [præposterosus, Latin.]

1. Having that first which ought to be last.

The method I take may be censured as preposterous, because I thus treat last of the antediluvian earth, which was first in order of nature. Woodw.

2. Wrong; absurd; perverted.

Put a case of a land of Amazons, where the whole government, publick and private, is in the hands of women: is not such a preposterous government against the first order of nature, for women to rule over men, and in itself void? Bacon.

Death from a father's hand, from whom I first Receiv'd a being! 'tis a preposterous gift,
An act at which inverted nature starts,
And blushes to behold herself so cruel. Denham.

Such is the world's preposterous fate;
Amongst all creatures, mortal hate
Love, though immortal, doth create. Denham.

The Roman missionaries gave their liberal contribution, affording their preposterous charity to make them proselytes, who had no mind to be confessors or martyrs. Fell.

By this distribution of matter, continual provision is every where made for the supply of bodies, quite contrary to the preposterous reasonings of those men, who expected so different a result. Woodward.

3. Applied to persons: foolish; absurd.

Preposterous as! that never read so far
To know the cause why musick was ordain'd. Shak.

PREPOSTEROUSLY. adv. [from preposterous.] In a wrong situation; absurdly.

Those things do best please me,
That befall prepost'rously. Shak'speare.

Upon this supposition, one animal would have its lungs where another hath its liver, and all the other members preposterously placed; there could not be a like configuration of parts in any two individuals. Bentley.

PREPOSTEROUSNESS. n. s. [from preposterous.] Absurdity; wrong order or method.

PREPOTENCY. n. s. [præpotentia, Latin.] Superiour power; predominance.

TO PRESA'GE. v. a. [presager, Fr. præsigio, Latin.]

1. To forebode; to foreknow; to foretel; to prophesy: it seems properly used of internal presension.

Henry's late presaging prophesy
Did glad my heart with hope. Shak'speare.

What pow'r of mind
Foreseeing, or presaging from the depth
Of knowledge past or present, could have fear'd
How such united force of gods, how such As stood like these, could ever know repulse? Milton.

This contagion might have been presaged upon consideration of its precursors. Harvey.

With'd freedom I presage you soon will find,
If heav'n be just, and if to virtue kind. Dryden.

2. Sometimes with of before the thing foretold.

That by certain signs we may presage
Of heats and rains, and wind's impetuous rage,
The sovereign of the heav'ns has set on high
The moon to mark the changes of the sky. Dryden.

3. To foretoken; to foreshow.

If I may trust the flattering ruth of sleep,
My dreams presage some joyful news at hand. Shak'speare.

An abettor of presbytery, or calvinistical discipline.

One of the more rigid presbyterians. Swift.

PRESBYTERY. n. s. [from presbyter.] Body of elders, whether priests or laymen.

Those which stood for the presbytery, thought their cause had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude
Chaos of presbyt'ry, where laymen guide
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleaveland.

Could a feeble presbytery, though perchance swelling enough, correct a wealthy, a potent offender? Holyday.

PRES'CIENCE. n. s. [prescience, Fr. from prescient.] Foreknowledge; knowledge of future things.

They tax our policy, and call it coward,
Foretell our prescience, and esteem no act
But that of hand. Shak'speare.

Prescience or foreknowledge, considered in order and nature, if we may speak of God after the manner of men, goeth before providence; for God foreknew all things before he had created them, or before they had being to be cared for; and prescience is no other than an infallible foreknowledge. Raleigh.

God's prescience, from all eternity, being but the seeing every thing that ever exists as it is, contingents as contingents, necessary as necessary, can neither work any change in the object, by thus seeing it, nor itself be deceived in what it sees. Hammond.

If certain prescience of uncertain events imply a contradiction, it seems it may be struck out of the omniscience of God, and leave no blemish behind. More.

Of things of the most accidental and mutable nature, God's prescience is certain. South.

Freedom was first bestow'd on human race,
And prescience only held the second place. Dryden.

PRES'CIENT. adj. [præsciens, Lat.] Fore-knowing; prophetick.

PRESCI'NDENT. adj. [præscindens, Latin.] Abstracting.

We may, for one single act, abstract from a reward, which nobody who knows the præscindens faculties of the soul, can deny. Cheyney.

To PRESCRIBE. v. a. [præscribo, Lat.]

1. To set down authoritatively; to order; to direct.

Doth the strength of some negative arguments prove this kind of negative argument strong, by force whereof all things are denied, which scripture affirmeth not, or all things, which scripture prescribeth not, condemned? Hooker.

To the blank moon her office they prescrib'd. Milton.

There's joy, when to wild will you laws prescribe,
When you did fortune carry back her bribe. Dryden.

When parents loves are order'd by a son,
Let streams prescribe their fountains where to run. Dryden.

By a short account of the pressing obligations which lie on the magistrate, I shall not so much prescribe directions for the future, as praise what is past. Atterbury.

2. To direct medically.

The end of satire is the amendment of vices by correction; and he who writes honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient, when he prescribes harsh remedies. Dryden.

The extremest ways they first ordain,
Prescribing such intolerable pain,
As none but Cæsar could sustain. Dryden.

Should any man argue, that a physician understands his own art best; and therefore, although he should prescribe poison to all his patients, he cannot be justly punished, but is answerable only to God? Swift.

To PRESCRI'BE. v. n.

1. To influence by long custom.

A reserve of puerility we have not shaken off from school, where being seasoned with minor sentences, they prescribe upon our riper years, and never are worn out but with our memories. Brown.

2. To influence arbitrarily; to give law.

The assuming an authority of dictating to others, and a forwardness to prescribe to their opinions, is a constant concomitant of this bias of our judgments. Locke.

3. [prescire, Fr.] To form a custom which has the force of law.

That obligation upon the lands did not prescribe or come into disuse, but by fifty consecutive years of exemption. Arbutnot.

4. To write medical directions and forms of medicine.

Modern 'pothecaries, taught the art
By doctors' bills to play the doctor's part,
Bold in the practice of mistaken rules,
Prescribe, apply, and call their masters fools. Pope.

PRESCRIPT. adj. [prescriptus, Latin.]

Directed; accurately laid down in a precept.

Those very laws so added, they themselves do not judge unlawful; as they plainly confess both in matter of prescript attire, and of rites appertaining to burial. Hooker.

PRESCRIPT. n. s. [prescriptum, Latin.]

And I'll request your presence. Shakspeare.

The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends,
As it disanimates his enemies. Shakspeare.

We have always the same natures, and are every where the servants of the same God, as every place is equally full of his presence, and every thing is equally his gift. Law.

2. Approach face to face to a great personage.

The shepherd Dorus answered with such a trembling voice and abashed countenance, and oftentimes so far from the matter, that it was some sport to the young ladies, thinking it want of education, which made him so discountenanced with unwonted presence. Shakspeare.

Men that very presence fear,
Which once they knew authority did bear. Daniel.

3. State of being in the view of a superiour.

I know not by what power I am made bold,
In such a presence here to plead my thoughts. Shakspeare.

Thou with eternal wisdom didst converse,
Wisdom thy sister, and with her didst play
In presence of th' Almighty Father, pleas'd
With thy celestial song. Milton.

Perhaps I have not so well consulted the repute of my intellectuals, in bringing their imperfections into such discerning presences. Glanville.

Since clinging cares and trains of inbred tears,
Not aw'd by arms, but in the presence bold,
Without respect to purple or to gold. Dryden.

4. A number assembled before a great person.

Look I so pale?—
—Ay; and no man in the presence,
But his red colour hath forlook his cheeks. Shaksp.
Odmar, of all this presence does contain,
Give her your wreath whom you esteem most fair. Dryden.

5. Port; air; mien; demeanour.

Virtue is best in a body that is comely, and that hath rather dignity of presence, than beauty of aspect. Bacon.

A graceful presence bespeaks acceptance, gives a force to language, and helps to convince by look and posture. Collier.

How great his presence, how erect his look,
How every grace, how all his virtuous mother Shines in his face, and charms me from his eyes! Smith.

6. Room in which a prince shows himself to his court.

By them they pass, all gazing on them round,
And to the presence mount, whose glorious view
Their frail amazed senses did confound. Spenser.

An't please your grace, the two great cardinals Wait in the presence. Shakspeare.

The lady Anne of Bretagne, passing through the presence in the court of France, and espying Chartier, a famous poet, leaning upon his elbow fast asleep, openly kissing him, said, we must honour with our kiss the mouth from whence so many sweet verses have proceeded. Peacham.

7. Readiness at need; quickness at expedients.

A good bodily strength is a felicity of nature, but nothing comparable to a large understanding and ready presence of mind. L'Estrange.

Errors, not to be recall'd, do find
Their best redress from presence of the mind;
Courage our greatest failings does supply. Waller.

8. The person of a superiour.

To her the sov'reign presence thus reply'd. Milt.

PRESENCE-CHAMBER. } n. s. [presence and PRESENCE-ROOM. } chamber or room.]

 Thronging crowds press on you as you pass,
 And with their eager joy make triumph flow. Dryden.
5. To come unseasonably or importunately.
 Counsel she may; and I will give thy ear
 The knowledge first of what is fit to hear:
 What I transact with others or alone,
 Beware to learn; not press too near the throne. Dryden.
6. To urge with vehemence and importunity.
 He pressed upon them greatly; and they turned in. Genesis.
 The less blood he drew, the more he took of treasure; and, as some construed it, he was the more sparing in the one, that he might be the more pressing in the other. Bacon.
 So thick the shiv'ring army stands,
 And press for passage with extended hands. Dryden.
7. To act upon or influence.
 When arguments press equally in matters indifferent, the safest method is to give up ourselves to neither. Addison.
8. To PRESS upon. To invade; to push against.
 Patroclus presses upon Hector too boldly, and by obliging him to fight, discovers it was not the true Achilles. P. pe.
- PRESS. n. f. [pressoir, Fr. from the verb.]
1. The instrument by which any thing is crushed or squeezed; a wine press, a cider press.
 The press is full, the fats overflow. Joel.
 When one came to the press fats to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty. Hagai.
 The stomach and intestines are the press, and the lacteal vessels the strainers, to separate the pure emulsion from the faeces. Arbutnot.
 They kept their cloaths, when they were not worn, constantly in a press, to give them a lustre. Arbutnot.
2. The instrument by which books are printed.

 but the more recent abortions of the press, wherein he proved frequently concerned. Fell.
 While Milt and Wilkins rise in weekly might,
 Make presses groan, lead senators to fight. Young.
3. Crowd; tumult; throng.
 Paul and Barnabas, when infidels admiring their virtues, went about to sacrifice unto them, rent their garments in token of horror, and as frightened, ran crying through the press of the people, O men wherefore do ye these things? Hooker.
 She held a great gold chain ylinked well,
 Whose upper end to highest heaven was knit,
 And lower part did reach to lowest hell,
 And all that press did round about her swell,
 To catchen hold of that long chain. Spenser.
 Who is it in the press that calls on me?
 I hear a tongue, shriller than all the musick,
 Cry, Caesar. Shakspeare.
 Ambitious Turnus in the press appears,
 And aggravating crimes augment their fears. Dryd.
 A new express all Agra does affright,
 Dara and Aurengzebe are join'd in fight;
 The press of people thickens to the court,
 Th' impatient crowd devouring the report. Dryden.
 Through the press enrag'd Thalestris flies,
 And scatters deaths around from both her eyes. Pope.
4. Violent tendency.
 Death having prey'd upon the outward parts,
 Leaves them insensible; his siege is now
 Against the mind; the which he pricks and wounds
 With many legions of strange fantasies;
 Which in their throng, and press to that last hold,
 Confound themselves. Shakspeare.
5. A kind of wooden case or frame for clothes and other uses.
 Creep into the kill hole.—Neither press, coffer,

- chest, trunk; but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places. Shakspeare.
6. A commission to force men into military service. For imprefs.

 crew that strolls about the streets to force men into naval service.
- PRESSINGLY. adv. [from pressing.] With force; closely.
 The one contracts his words, speaking pressingly and short; the other delights in long-breathed accents. Horwel.
- PRESSION. n. f. [from press.] The act of pressing.
 If light consisted only in pression, propagated without actual motion, it would not be able to agitate and heat the bodies which refract and reflect it: if it consisted in motion, propagated to all distances in an instant, it would require an infinite force every moment, in every shining particle, to generate that motion: and if it consisted in pression or motion, propagated either in an instant or in time, it would bend into the shadow. Newton.
- PRESSITANT. adj. Gravitating; heavy.
 Not in use.
 Neither the celestial matter of the vortices, nor the air, nor water, are pressitant in their proper places. More.

1. The act of pressing or crushing.
2. The state of being pressed or crushed.
3. Force acting against any thing; gravitation; weight acting or resisting.
 The inequality of the pressure of parts appeareth in this; that if you take a body of stone, and another of wood of the same magnitude and shape, and throw them with equal force, you cannot throw the wood so far as the stone. Bacon.
 Although the glasses were a little convex, yet this transparent spot was of a considerable breadth, which breadth seemed principally to proceed from the yielding inwards of the parts of the glasses, by reason of their mutual pressure. Newton.
 The blood flows through the vessels by the excess of the force of the heart above the incumbent pressure, which in fat people is excessive. Arbutnot.
4. Violence inflicted; oppression.
 A wise father ingenuously confessed, that those,
 which persuaded pressure of consciences, were commonly interested therein. Bacon.
 His modesty might be secured from pressure by the concealing of him to be the author. Fell.
5. Affliction; grievance; distress.

- Mine own and my people's pressures are grievous, and peace would be very pleasing. King Charles.
 The genuine price of lands in England would be twenty years purchase, were it not for accidental pressure under which it labours. Child.
 To this consideration he retreats, in the midst of all his pressures, with comfort; in this thought, notwithstanding the sad afflictions with which he was overwhelmed, he mightily exults. Atterbury.
 Excellent was the advice of Elephas to Job, in the midst of his great troubles and pressures;
 acquaint thyself now with God, and be at peace. Atterbury.
6. Impression; stamp; character made by impression.
 From my memory
 I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
 All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
 That youth and observation copy'd there. Shakspeare.
- PREST. adj. [prest or prêt, Fr.]
1. Ready; not dilatory. This is said to have been the original sense of the word prest men; men, not forced into the service, as now we understand it, but men, for a certain sum received, prest or ready to march at command.
 Each mind is prest, and open every ear,
 To hear new tidings, though they no way joy us. Fairfax.
 Gritus desired nothing more than to have confirmed the opinion of his authority in the minds of the vulgar people, by the prest and ready attendance of the Vayvod. Knolles.
2. Neat; tight. In both senses, the word is obsolete.
 More wealth any where, to be breefe,
 More people, more handsome and prest

Presto! begone! 'tis here again;
 There's ev'ry piece as big as ten. Swift.
- PRESUMABLY. adv. [from presume.]
 Without examination.
 Authors presumably writing by common places, wherein, for many years, promiscuously amassing all that make for their subject, break forth at last into useless rhapsodies. Brown.
- To PRESUME. v. n. [presumer, French;
presumo, Latin.]
1. To suppose; to believe previously without examination.
 O much deceiv'd, much failing, hapless Eve!
 Of thy presum'd return! event perverse! Milton.
 Experience supplants the use of conjecture in the point; we do not only presume it may be so, but actually find it is so. Government of the Tongue.
2. To suppose; to affirm without immediate proof.
 Although in the relation of Moses there be very few persons mentioned, yet are there many more to be presumed. Brown.

I thought our utmost good
Was in one word of freedom understood:
The fatal blessing came; from prison free,
I starve abroad, and lose the sight of Emily.

Dryden.

Unkind! can you, whom only I adore,
Set open to your slave the prison door?

Dryden.

The tyrant Æolus,
With power imperial curbs the struggling winds,
And sounding tempests in dark prisons binds.

Dryden.

He, that has his chains knocked off, and the prison doors set open to him, is presently at liberty.

Locke.

At his first coming to his little village, it was as disagreeable to him as a prison, and every day seemed too tedious to be endured in so retired a place.

Law.

To PRISON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To imprison; to shut up in hold; to restrain from liberty.

2. To captivate; to enchain.

Culling their potent herbs and baleful drugs,
They, as they sung, would take the prison'd soul,
And lap it in Elysium.

Milton.

Universal plodding prisons up
The nimble spirits in the arteries.

Shakspeare.

Then did the king enlarge
The spleen he prison'd.

Chapman.

PRISONBASE. n. f. A kind of rural play, commonly called prisonbars.

The spachies of the court play every Friday at giocho di canni, which is no other than prisonbase upon horseback, hitting one another with darts, as the others do with their hands.

Sandys.

PRISONER. n. f. [prisonnier, Fr.]

1. One who is confined in hold.

Cæsar's ill-erected tower,
To whose flint bosom my condemned lord
Is doom'd a prisoner.

Shakspeare.

The most pernicious infection, next the plague, is the smell of the jail, when prisoners have been long and close, and nastily kept.

Bacon.

He that is tied with one slender string, such as one resolute struggle would break, he is prisoner only at his own sloth, and who will pity his thraldom?

Decay of Piety.

A prisoner is troubled, that he cannot go whither he would; and he that is at large is troubled, that he does not know whither to go.

L'Estrange.

2. A captive; one taken by the enemy.

So oft as homeward I from her depart,
I go like one that having lost the field,
Is prisoner led away with heavy heart.

Spenser.

There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, the taking of the Spanish general d'Ocampo prisoner, with the loss of few of the English.

ancient; original.

Now their pristine worth

The Britons recollect.

Phillips.

This light being trajected only through the parallel superficies of the two prisms, if it suffered any change by the refraction of one superficies, it lost that impression by the contrary refraction of the other superficies, and so, being restored to its pristine constitution, became of the same nature and condition as at first.

Newton.

PRITHEE. A familiar corruption of pray thee, or I pray thee, which some of the tragick writers have injudiciously used.

Well, what was that scream for, I prithee?

L'Estrange.

Alas! why com'st thou at this dreadful moment,
To shock the peace of my departing soul?

Away! I prithee leave me!

Rowe.

PRIVACY. n. f. [from private.]

Fame, not contented with her broad highway, Delights, for change, thro' private paths to stray.

Harte.

2. Alone; not accompanied.

3. Being upon the same terms with the rest of the community; particular: opposed to publick.

When publick consent of the whole hath established any thing, every man's judgment, being thereunto compared, were private, howsoever his calling be to some kind of publick charge; so that of peace and quietness there is not any way possible, unless the probable voice of every intire society or body politick overrule all private of like nature in the same body.

Hooker.

He sues

To let him breathe between the heav'ns and earth,
A private man in Athens.

Shakspeare.

What infinite heartease must kings neglect,
That private men enjoy? and what have kings,
That private have not too, save ceremony?

Shakspeare.

Peter was but a private man, and not to be any way compared with the dukes of his house.

Peacem.

The first principles of christian religion should not be forced with school points and private tenets.

Sanderfon.

Dare you,

A private man, presume to love a queen?

Dryden.

Wotton.

PRIVATION. n. f. [privation, Fr. privatio,
Latin.]

1. Removal or destruction of any thing or quality.

For, what is this contagious sin of kind?

But a privation of that grace within?

Davies.

If the privation be good, it follows not the former condition was evil, but less good: for the flower or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good.

Bacon.

So bounded are our natural desires,
That wanting all, and setting pain aside,
With bare privation sense is satisfy'd.

Dryden.

After some account of good, evil will be known by consequence, as being only a privation or absence of good.

South.

A privation is the absence of what does naturally belong to the thing, or which ought to be present with it; as when a man or horse is deaf or dead, or a physician or divine unlearned; these are privations.

Watts.

2. The act of the mind by which, in considering a subject, we separate it from any thing appendant.

3. The act of degrading from rank or office.

If part of the people or estate be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or cyphers in the privation or translation.

Bacon.

PRIVATIVE. adj. [privatis, Fr. privativus, Latin.]

1. Causing privation of any thing.

2. Consisting in the absence of something;
not positive. Privative is in things,
what negative is in propositions.

The impression from privative to active, as from silence to noise, is a greater degree than from less noise to more.

Bacon.

The very privative blessings, the blessings of immunity, safeguard, liberty and integrity, which we enjoy, deserve the thanksgiving of a whole life.

Taylor.

PRIVATIVE. n. f. That of which the essence is the absence of something, as silence is only the absence of sound.

PRI

Harmonical sounds and discordant sounds are both active and positive, but blackness and darkness are indeed but privatives, and therefore have little or no activity; somewhat they do contristate, but very little. Bacon.

PRI'VATIVELY. adv. [from privative.]

1. By the absence of something necessary to be present.
2. Negatively.

The duty of the new covenant is set down, first privatively, not like that of Mosical observances external, but positively, laws given into the minds and hearts. Hammond.

PRI'VATIVENESS. n. f. [from privative.]

Notation of absence of something that should be present.

PRI'VET. n. f. [ligustrum.] A plant. Miller.

I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Shakspeare.

TO PRI'VILEGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To invest with rights or immunities; to grant a privilege.

The great a-e privileg'd alone,
To punish all injustice but their own. Dryden.

He happier yet, who privileg'd by fate
To shorter labour, and a lighter weight,
Receiv'd but yesterday the gift of breath,
Ordain'd to-morrow to return to death. Prior.

2. To exempt from censure or danger.

The court is rather deemed as a privileged place of unbridled licentiousness, than as the abiding of him, who, as a father, should give a fatherly example. Sidney.

He took this place for sanctuary,
And it shall privilege him from your hands. Shakspeare.

This place
Doth privilege me, speak what reason will. Daniel.

3. To exempt from paying tax or impost.

Many things are by our laws privileged from tythes, which by the canon law are chargeable. Hale.

conveyances thereof unto their privy friends, who privily send them the revenues. Spenser.

PRI'VITY. n. f. [privauté, Fr. from privy.]

1. Private communication.

I will unto you in privy discover the drift of my purpose; I mean thereby to settle an eternal peace in that country, and also to make it very profitable to her majesty. Spenser.

2. Consciousness; joint knowledge; private concurrence.

The authority of higher powers hath force even in these things which are done without their privy, and are of mean reckoning. Hooker.

Upon this French going out, took he upon him,
Without the privy o' th' king, t' appoint
Who should attend him. Shakspeare.

All the doors were laid open for his departure, not without the privy of the prince of Orange, concluding that the kingdom might better be settled in his absence. Swift.

PRI

3. [In the plural.] Secret parts.

Few of them have any thing to cover their privities. Abbot.

PRI'VY. adj. [privé, Fr.]

1. Private; not publick; assigned to secret uses.

The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize on half his goods; the other half
Comes to the privy coffer of the state. Shakspeare.

2. Secret; clandestine; done by stealth.

He took advantage of the night for such privy attempts, insomuch that the bruit of his manliness was spread every where. 2 Maccabees.

3. Secret; not shown; not publick.

The sword of the great men that are slain entereth into their privy chamber. Ezekiel.

4. Admitted to secrets of state.

The king has made him
One of the privy council. Shakspeare.

One, having let his beard grow from the martyrdom of king Charles I. till the restoration, desired to be made a privy counsellor. Spektor.

5. Conscious to any thing; admitted to participation of knowledge.

Sir Valentine
This night intends to steal away your daughter;
Myself am one made privy to the plot. Shakspeare.

Many being privy to the fact,
How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Daniel.

He would rather lose half of his kingdom, than be privy to such a secret, which he commanded me never to mention. Swift.

PRI'VY. n. f. Place of retirement; necessary house.

Your fancy
Would still the same ideas give ye,
As when you spy'd her on the privy. Swift.

PRIZE. n. f. [prix, Fr.]

1. A reward gained by contest with competitors.

If ever he go alone, I'll never wrestle for prize.
Shakspeare.

Though their foe were big and strong, and often brake the ring,

Forg'd of their lances; yet enforc't, he left th' affected prize. Chapman.

I fought and conquer'd, yet have lost the prize.
Dryden.

The raising such silly competitions among the ignorant, proposing prizes for such usefess accomplishments, and inspiring them with such absurd ideas of superiority, has in it something immoral as well as ridiculous. Addison.

They are not indeed suffered to dispute with us the proud prizes of arts and sciences, of learning and elegance, in which I have much suspicion they would often prove our superiors. Law.

2. A reward gained by any performance.

True poets empty fame and praise despise;
Fame is the trumpet, but your smile the prize. Dryden.

3. [prise, French.] Something taken by adventure; plunder.

The king of Scots she did send to France,
To fill king Edward's fame with prisoner kings,
And make his chronicle as rich with prize,
As is the ouzy bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck. Shakspeare.

Age that all men overcomes, has made his prize
on thee. Chapman.

He acquitted himself like a valiant, but not like an honest man; for he converted the prizes to his own use. Arbutnot.

Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes
Soon to obtain and long possess the prize. Pope.

TO PRIZE. v. a. [from appraiser; priser,
Fr. apprécier, Lat.]

1. To rate; to value at a certain price.

Life I prize not a straw; but for mine honour
Which I would free. Shakspeare.

A goodly price that I was prized at of them. Zechariah.

2. To esteem; to value highly.

PRO

I go to free us both of pain;
I priz'd your person, but your crown disdain. Dryden.

Some the French writers, some our own despise;
The ancients only, or the moderns prize. Pope.

PRI'ZER. n. f. [priseur, Fr. from prize.]

He that values.

It holds its estimate and dignity,
As well wherein 'tis precious of itself,
As in the prizer. Shakspeare.

PRI'ZEFIGHTER. n. f. [prize and fighter.]

One that fights publicly for a reward.

Martin and Crambe engaged like prizefighters.
Arbutnot and Pope.

In Fig the prizefighter by day delight. Bramston.

PRO. [Latin.] For; in defence of: pro and con, for pro and contra, for and against.

Despicable cant.

Doctrinal points in controversy had been agitated in the pulpits, with more warmth than had used to be; and thence the animosity increased in books pro and con. Clarendon.

Matthew met Richard, when
Of many knotty points they spoke,
And pro and con by turns they took. Prior.

PROBABILITY. n. f. [probabilitas, Lat.

probabilité, Fr. from probable.] Likelihood; appearance of truth; evidence arising from the preponderation of argument: it is less than moral certainty.

Probability is the appearance of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, by the intervention of proofs, whose connection is not constant; but appears for the most part to be so. Locke.

As for probabilities, what thing was there ever set down so agreeable with sound reason, but some probable shew against it might be made? Hooker.

The reason why men are moved to believe a probability of gain by adventuring their stocks into such foreign countries as they have never seen, and of which they have made no trial, is from the testimony of other credible persons. Wilkins.

If a truth be certain, and thwart interest, it will quickly fetch it down to but a probability; nay, if it does not carry with it an impregnable evidence, it will go near to debase it to a downright falsity. Soutb.

Though moral certainty be sometimes taken for a high degree of probability, which can only produce a doubtful assent; yet it is also frequently used for a firm assent to a thing upon such grounds as fully satisfy a prudent man. Tillotson.

For a perpetual motion, magnetical virtues are not without some strong probabilities of proving effectual. Wilkins.

Which tempers, if they were duly improved by proper studies, and sober methods of education, would in all probability carry them to greater heights of piety, than are to be found amongst the generality of men. Law.

PRO'BABLE. adj. [probable, Fr. proba-bilis, Latin.] Likely; having more evidence than the contrary.

The publick approbation, given by the body of this whole church unto those things which are established, doth make it but probable that they are good, and therefore unto a necessary proof that they are not good it must give place. Hooker.

The only seasonable inquiry is, which is of pro-bables the most, or of improbables the least such. Hammond.

I do not say, that the principles of religion are merely probable; I have before asserted them to be morally certain: and that to a man who is careful to preserve his mind free from prejudice, and to consider, they will appear unquestionable, and the deductions from them demonstrable. Wilkins.

That is accounted probable, which has better arguments producible for it, than can be brought against it. Soutb.

They assented to things, that were neither evident nor certain, but only probable; for they conversed, they merchandized upon a probable persuasion of the honesty and truth of those whom they corresponded with. Soutb.

PRO'BABLY. adj. [from probable.] Likely;
in likelihood.

PRO

Distinguish betwixt what may possibly, and what will probably be done. L'Estrange.

Our constitution in church or state could not probably have been long preserved, without such methods. Swift.

PROBAT. n. f. [Latin.] The proof of wills and testaments of persons deceased in the spiritual court, either in common form by the oath of the executor, or with witnesses. Dict.

PROBATION. n. f. [probatio, from probo, Lat. probation, Fr.]

1. Proof; evidence; testimony.

Of the truth herein,

This present object made probation. Shakspeare.

He was lapt in a most curious mantle, which, for more probation, I can produce. Shakspeare.

The kinds of probation for several things being as much disproportioned, as the objects of the several senses are to one another. Wilkins.

2. The act of proving by ratiocination or testimony.

When these principles, what is, is, and it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be, are made use of in the probation of propositions, wherein are words standing for complex ideas, as man or horse, there they make men receive and retain falsehood for manifest truth. Locke.

3. Trial; examination.

In the practical part of knowledge, much will be left to experience and probation, whereunto indication cannot so fully reach. Bacon.

4. Moral trial.

At the end of the world, when the state of our trial and probation shall be finished, it will be proper season for the distribution of public justice. Nelson.

5. Trial before entrance into monastick life; noviciate.

I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof, in your days of probation, you have been a sharer. Pope.

PROBATIONARY. adj. [from probation.] Serving for trial.

PROBATIONER. n. f. [from probation.]

1. One who is upon trial.

Hear a mortal muse thy praise rehearse,

In no ignoble verse;

But such as thy own verse did practise here,

When thy first fruits of poetry were giv'n,

To make thyself a welcome inmate there;

While yet a young probationer,

And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.

Build a thousand churches, where these probationers may read their wall lectures. Swift.

2. A novice.

This root of bitterness was but a probationer in the soil; and though it set forth some offsets to preserve its kind, yet Satan was fain to cherish them. Decay of Piety.

PROBATIONERSHIP. n. f. [from probationer.] State of being a probationer; noviciate.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to that state of mediocrity and probationership, he has been pleased to place us in here, wherein to check our over-confidence. Locke.

PROBATORY. adj. [from probo, Latin.] Serving for trial.

Job's afflictions were not vindictory punishments, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.

PROBATUM EST. A Latin expression added to the end of a receipt, signifying it is tried or proved.

Vain the concern that you express,

That uncalled Alard will possess

Your house and coach both day and night,

And that Macbeth was haunted less

By Banquo's restless sprite:

Lend him but fifty louis d'or,

And you shall never see him more;

Take my advice, probatum est.

Why do the gods indulge our store,

But to secure our rest?

Prior.

PRO

PROBE. n. f. [from probo, Lat.] A slender wire by which surgeons search the depth of wounds.

A round white stone was lodged, which was so fastened in that part, that the physician with his probe could not stir it. Fell.

I made search with a probe. Wifeman.

PROBE-SCISSORS. n. f. [probe and scissors.] Scissors used to open wounds, of which the blade thrust into the orifice has a button at the end.

The sinus was snipt up with probe-scissors. Wifeman.

TO PROBE. v. a. [probo, Lat.] To search; to try by an instrument.

Nothing can be more painful, than to probe and search a purulent old sore to the bottom. South.

He'd raise a blush, where secret vice he found; And tickle, while he gently prob'd the wound. Dryden.

PROBITY. n. f. [probité, Fr. probitas, Lat.] Honesty; sincerity; veracity.

The truth of our Lord's ascension might be deduced from the probité of the apostles. Fiddes.

So near approach we their celestial kind,

By justice, truth, and probité of mind. Pope.

PROBLEM. n. f. [probleme, Fr. πρόβλημα.] A question proposed.

The problem is, whether a man constantly and strongly believing that such a thing shall be, it doth help any thing to the effecting of the thing. Bacon.

Deeming that abundantly confirmed to advance it above a disputable problem, I proceed to the next proposition. Hammond.

Although in general we understood colours, yet were it not an easy problem to resolve, why grass is green? Brown.

This problem let philosophers resolve, What makes the globe from west to east revolve? Blackmore.

PROBLEMA'TICAL. adj. [from problem; problematique, Fr.] Uncertain; unsettled; disputed; disputable.

It is a question problematical and dubious, whether the observation of the sabbath was imposed upon Adam, and his posterity in paradise? White.

I promised no better arguments than might be expected in a point problematical. Boyle.

Diligent enquiries into remote and problematical guilt, leave a gate wide open to the whole tribe of informers. Swift.

PROBLEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from problematical.] Uncertainly.

PROBOSCIS. n. f. [proboscis, Lat.] A snout; the trunk of an elephant; but it is used also for the same part in every creature, that bears any resemblance thereunto.

The elephant wreath'd, to make them sport, His lithe proboscis. Milton.

PROCA'CIOUS. adj. [procax, Lat.] Petulant; loose. Dict.

PROCA'CITY. n. f. [from procacious.] Petulance. Dict.

PROCATA'RTICK. adj. [προκαταρτικος.] Forerunning; remotely antecedent. See PROCATARTIS.

James IV. of Scotland, falling away in his flesh, without the precedence of any procatactick cause, was suddenly cured by decharming the witchcraft. Harvey.

The physician enquires into the procatactick causes. Harvey.

PROCATA'RXIS. n. f. [προκαταρξις.] The pre-existent cause of a disease, which co-operates with others that are subsequent, whether internal or external; as anger or heat of climate, which bring such an ill disposition of the juices, as occasions a fever: the ill disposition being the immediate cause, and the bad air the procatactick cause. Quincy.

PRO

PROCEDURE. n. f. [procedure, Fr. from proceed.]

1. Manner of proceeding; management; conduct.

This is the true procedure of conscience, always supposing a law from God, before it lays obligation upon man. South.

2. Act of proceeding; progress; process; operation.

Although the distinction of these several procedures of the soul do not always appear distinct, especially in sudden actions, yet in actions of weight, all these have their distinct order and procedure. Hale.

3. Produce; thing produced.

No known substance, but earth and the procedures of earth, as tile and stone, yieldeth any mors or herby substance. Bacon.

TO PROCEE'D. v. n. [procedo, Latin; proceder, French.]

1. To pass from one thing or place to another.

Adam

Proceeded thus to ask his heavenly guest. Milton.

Temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakspeare.

These things, when they proceed not, they go backward. Ben Jonson.

3. To come forth from a place or from a sender.

I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me. John.

4. To go or march in state.

He ask'd a clear stage for his muse to proceed in. Anonymous.

5. To issue; to arise; to be the effect of; to be produced from.

A dagger of the mind, a false creation Proceeding from the heat oppress'd brain. Shakspeare.

From me what proceed

But all corrupt, both mind and will deprav'd. Milton.

All this proceeded not from any want of knowledge. Dryden.

6. To prosecute any design.

He that proceeds upon other principles, in his enquiry into any sciences, posits himself in a party. Locke.

Since husbandry is of large extent, the poet singles out such precepts to proceed on, as are capable of ornament. Addison.

7. To be transacted; to be carried on.

He will, after his four fashion, tell you What hath proceeded worthy note to-day. Shakspeare.

8. To make progress.

Violence Proceeded, and oppression and sword law Through all the plain. Milton.

9. To carry on juridical process.

Proceed by process, left parties break out, And sack great Rome with Romans. Shakspeare.

Instead of a ship, to levy upon his county such a sum of money for his majesty's use, with direction in what manner he should proceed against such as refused. Clarendon.

To judgment he proceeded on th' accu'd. Milton.

10. To transact; to act; to carry on any affair methodically.

From them I will not hide My judgments, how with mankind I proceed;

As how with peccant angels late they saw. Milton.

How severely with themselves proceed, The men who write such verse as who can read?

Their own strict judges, not a word they spare, That wants or force, or light, or weight, or care. Pope.

11. To take effect; to have its course.

This rule only proceeds and takes place, when a person cannot of common law condemn another by his sentence. Ayliffe.

PRO

12. To be propagated; to come by generation.
From my loins thou shalt proceed. Milton.
13. To be produced by the original efficient cause.
O Adam, one Almighty is, from whom
All things proceed, and up to him return! Milton.
- PROCEED. n. s. [from the verb.] Produce: as, the proceeds of an estate. Clarissa. Not an imitable word, though much used in writings of commerce.
- PROCEEDER. n. s. [from proceed.] One who goes forward; one who makes a progress.
He that seeketh victory over his nature, let him not set himself too great nor too small tasks; for the first will make him dejected by often failing; and the second will make him a small proceeder, though by often prevailings. Bacon.
- PROCEEDING. n. s. [procedé, Fr. from proceed.]
1. Process from one thing to another; series of conduct; transaction.
I'll acquaint our duteous citizens,
With all your just proceedings in this case. Shaksp.
My dear love
To your proceedings bids me tell you this. Shaksp.
The understanding brought to knowledge by degrees, and in such a general proceeding, nothing is hard. Locke.
It is a very unusual proceeding, and I would not have been guilty of it for the world. Arbutnot.
Clear the justice of God's proceedings, it seems reasonable there should be a future judgment for a suitable distribution of rewards and punishments. Nelson.
From the earliest ages of christianity, there never was a precedent of such a proceeding. Swift.
 2. Legal procedure: as, such are the proceedings at law.
PROCE'LOUS. adj. [procellosus, Lat.] Tempestuous. Dict.
 - PROCE'PTION. n. s. Preoccupation; act of taking something sooner than another.

Having so little power to offend others, that I have none to preserve what is mine own from their preception. King Charles.
 - PROCE'RITY. n. s. [from procerus, Latin.] Tallness; height of stature.
We shall make attempts to lengthen out the human figure, and restore it to its ancient procerity. Addison.
 - PRO'CESS. n. s. [proces, Fr. processus, Lat.]
1. Tendency; progressive course.
That there is somewhat higher than either of these two, no other proof doth need, than the very process of man's desire, which being natural should be frustrate, if there we not some farther thing wherein it might rest at the length contented, which in the former it cannot do. Hooker.
 2. Regular and gradual progress.
Commend me to your honourable wife;
Tell her the process of Antonio's end;
Say how I lov'd you; speak me fair in death. Shaksp.
They declared unto him the whole process of that war, and with what success they had endured. Knolles.
Immediate are the acts of God, more swift
Than time or motion; but to human ears
Cannot without process of speech be told. Milton.
Saturnian Juno
Attends the fatal process of the war. Dryden.
In the parable of the wasteful steward, we have a lively image of the force and process of this temptation. Rogers.
 3. Course; continual flux or passage.
I have been your wife, in this obedience,
Upward of twenty years; if in the course
And process of this time you can report,
And prove it too against mine honour aught,
Turn me away. Shaksp.

PRO

- This empire rise,
By policy and long process of time. Milton.
Many acts of parliament have, in long process of time, been lost, and the things forgotten. Hale.
4. Methodical management of any thing.
Experiments, familiar to chymists, are unknown to the learned, who never read chymical processes. Boyle.
The process of that great day, with several of the particular circumstances of it, are fully described by our Saviour. Nelson.
An age they live releas'd
From all the labour, process, clamour, woe,
Which our sad scenes of daily action know. Prior.
5. Course of law.
Proceed by process,
Left parties, as he is belov'd, break out. Shaksp.
All processes ecclesiastical should be made in the king's name, as in writs at the common law. Hayward.
That a suit of law, and all judicial process, is not in itself a sin, appears from courts being erected by consent in the apostles days, for the management and conduct of them. Kettlewell.
The patricians they chose for their patrons, to answer for their appearance, and defend them in any process. Swift.
- PROCESSION. n. s. [procession, Fr. processio, Lat.] A train marching in ceremonious solemnity.
If there be cause for the church to go forth in solemn procession, his whole family have such business come upon them, that no one can be spared. Hooker.
Him all his train
Follow'd in bright procession. Milton.
'Tis the procession of a funeral vow,
Which cruel laws to Indian wives allow. Dryden.
The priests, Potitius at their head,
In skins of beasts involv'd, the long procession led. Dryden.
When this vast congregation was formed into a regular procession to attend the ark of the covenant, the king marched at the head of his people, with hymns and dances. Addison.
It is to be hoped, that the persons of wealth, who made their procession through the members of these new erected seminaries, will contribute to their maintenance. Addison.
The Ethiopians held an annual sacrifice of twelve days to the gods; all that time they carried their images in procession, and placed them at their festivals. Broom.

The office of a proconsul.
- To PROCRASTINATE. v. a. [procrastinar, Lat.] To defer; to delay; to put off from day to day.
Hopeless and helpless doth Ægeon wind,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end. Shaksp.
Let men seriously and attentively listen to that voice within them, and they will certainly need no other medium to convince them, either of the error or danger of thus procrastinating their repentance. Decay of Piety.
- To PROCRASTINATE. v. n. To be dilatory.
Set out early and resolutely without procrastinating or looking back. Hammond.
I procrastinate more than I did twenty years ago, and have several things to finish, which I put off to twenty years hence. Swift to Pope.
- PROCRAS'TINATION. n. s. [procrastinatio, Latin; from procrastinate.] Delay; dilatoriness.
How desperate the hazard of such procrastination is, hath been convincingly demonstrated by better pens. Decay of Piety.
- PROCRAS'TINATOR. n. s. [from procrastinate.] A dilatory person.

PRO

PROCREANT. adj. [procreans, Lat.] Productive; pregnant.

The temple-haunting martlet does approve,
By his lov'd mansionary, that heav'n's breath
Smells wooingly here: no jutting frieze,
But this bird
Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle.
Shakspeare.

TO PROCREATE. v. a. [procreo, Latin; procreer, Fr.] To generate; to produce.

Flies crushed and corrupted, when inclosed in such vessels, did never procreate a new fly. Bentley.
Since the earth retains her fruitful power,
To procreate plants the forest to restore;
Say, why to nobler animals alone
Should she be feeble, and unfruitful grown?
Blackmore.

PROCREATION. n. f. [procreation, Fr. procreatio, Lat. from procreate.] Generation; production.

The enclosed warmth, which the earth hath stirred up by the heat of the sun, assisteth nature in the speedier procreation of those varieties which the earth bringeth forth. Raleigh.

Neither her outside form'd so fair, nor ought
In procreation common to all kinds. Milton.
Uncleanliness is an unlawful gratification of the appetite of procreation. South.

PROCREATIVE. adj. [from procreate.] Generative; productive.

The ordinary period of the human procreative faculty in males is sixty-five, in females forty-five.
Hale.

PROCREATIVENESS. n. f. [from procreative.] Power of generation.

These have the accurst privilege of propagating and not expiring, and have reconciled the procreativeness of corporeal, with the duration of incorporeal substances. Decay of Piety.

PROCREATOR. n. f. [from procreate.] Generator; begetter.

PROCTOR. n. f. [contracted from procurator.]

my countrymen, I will only present you with some few verses. Camden.

Be now as prodigal of all dear grace,
As nature was in making graces dear,
When she did starve the general world beside,
And prodigally gave them all to you. Shakspeare.

My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts,
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged. Shakspeare.

Diogenes did beg more of a prodigal man than the rest; whereupon one said, see your baseness, that when you find a liberal mind, you will take most of him; no, said Diogenes, but I mean to beg of the rest again. Bacon.

PRO

As a hero, whom his baser foes
In troops surround; now these assail, now those,
Though prodigal of life, disdains to die
By common hands. Denham.

Here patriots live, who, for their country's good,
In fighting fields were prodigal of blood. Dryden.

PROFANA'TION. n. s. [profanation, Fr. from profano, Lat.]

1. The act of violating any thing sacred.

He knew how bold men are to take even from God himself; how hardly that house would be kept from impious profanation he knew. Hooker.

What I am and what I would, are to your ears divinity; to any others, profanation. Shakspeare.
'Twere profanation of our joys,
To tell the laity our love. Donne.

Profanation of the Lord's day, and of other solemn festival days, which are devoted to divine and religious offices, is impious. White.

All profanation and invasion of things sacred, is an offence against the eternal law of nature. South.

Others think I ought not to have translated Chaucer: they suppose a veneration due to his old language, and that it is little less than profanation and sacrilege to alter it. Dryden.

2. Irreverence to holy things or persons.

Great men may jest with saints, 'tis wit in them;
But, in the less, foul profanation. Shakspeare.

PROFA'NE. adj. [profane, Fr. from profanus, Lat.]

1. Irreverent to sacred names or things.

Profane fellow!
Wert thou the son of Jupiter, and no more
But what thou art besides, thou wert too base
To be his groom. Shakspeare.

These have caused the weak to stumble, and the profane to blaspheme, offending the one, and hardening the other. South.

2. Not sacred; secular.

The universality of the deluge is attested by profane history; for the fame of it is gone through the earth, and there are records or traditions concerning it in all the parts of this and the new found world. Burnet.

3. Polluted; not pure.
Nothing is profane that serveth to holy things. Raleigh.
4. Not purified by holy rites.
Far hence be souls profane,
The Sibyl cry'd, and from the grove abstain. Dryden.
- To PROFANE, v. a. [profano, Lat. profaner, French.]

profess.]
1. Calling; vocation; known employment.
The term profession is particularly used of divinity, physick, and law.
I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour, than Your high profession spiritual. Shakspeare.
If we confound arts with the abuse of them, we shall condemn all honest trades; for there are that deceive in all professions, and bury in forgetfulness all knowledge. Raleigh.
Some of our profession keep wounds tented. Wiseman.
No other one race, not the sons of any one other profession, not perhaps altogether, are so much scattered amongst all professions, as the sons of clergymen.
Spratt.
This is a practice, in which multitudes, besides those of the learned professions, may be engaged. Watts.
2. Declaration.
A naked profession may have credit, where no other evidence can be given. Glanville.

be avoided. Clarissa.
- PROFESSOR, n. s. [professeur, Fr. from profess.]
1. One who declares himself of any opinion or party.
When the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed, you may doubt the springing up of a new sect. Bacon.
The whole church of professors at Philippi to

- whom he writes, was not made up wholly of the elect, sincere, and persevering christians, but like the net, in Christ's parable, that caught both good and bad, and had no doubt some insincere persons, hypocrites, and temporaries in it. Hammond.
2. One who publicly practises or teaches an art.
Professors in most sciences are generally the worst qualified to explain their meanings to those who are not of their tribes. Swift.

Pope.

2. Advancement; motion forward.

Through all thy veins shall run A cold and drowsy humour, which shall seize Each vital spirit; for no pulse shall keep His nat'ral progress, but surcease to beat.

Shakespeare.

This motion worketh it round at first, which way to deliver itself; and then worketh in progress, where it findeth the deliverance easiest.

Bacon.

Out of Ethiopia beyond Egypt had been a strange progress for ten hundred thousand men.

Raleigh.

Whoever understands the progress and revolutions of nature, will see that neither the present form of the earth, nor its first form, were permanent and immutable.

Burnet.

It is impossible the mind should ever be stopped in its progress in this space.

Locke.

The bounds of all body we have no difficulty to arrive at; but when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress in the endless expansion.

Locke.

Perhaps I judge hastily, there being several, in whose writings I have made very little progress.

Swift.

3. Intellectual improvement; advancement in knowledge; proficience.

Solon the wise his progress never ceas'd,

But still his learning with his days increas'd.

It is strange, that men should not have made more progress in the knowledge of these things.

Several defects in the understanding hinder it in its progress to knowledge.

Others despond at the first difficulty, and conclude, that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities.

You perhaps have made no progress in the most important christian virtues; you have scarce got half way in humility and charity.

Removal from one place to another.

From Egypt arts their progress made to Greece,

Wrapt in the fable of the golden fleece.

Denham.

5. A journey of state; a circuit.

He gave order, that there should be nothing in his journey like unto a warlike march, but rather like unto the progress of a king in full peace.

O may I live to hail the day,

When the glad nation shall survey

Their sov'reign, through his wide command,

Passing in progress o'er the land.

To PROGRESS. v. n. [procedior, Lat.] To capons so. Shakspeare.

His promises were, as he then was, mighty;
But his performance, as he now is, nothing. Shakspeare.

O Lord, let thy promise unto David be established. Chronicles.

Duty still preceded promise, and strict endeavour only founded comfort. Fell.

Behold, she said, perform'd in ev'ry part
My promise made; and Vulcan's labour'd art. Dryden.

Let any man consider, how many sorrows he would have escaped had God called him to his rest, and then say whether the promise to deliver the just from the evils to come ought not to be made our daily prayer. Wake.

More than wise men, when the war began, could promise to themselves in their most sanguine hopes. Davenant.

2. Performance of promise; grant of the thing promised.

Now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee. Acts.

Nor was he obliged by oath to a strict observation of that which promissorily was unlawful. Bacon.

PRO'MONT. } n. s. [promontore, Fr.]

PRO'MONTORY. } promontorium, Latin.

Promont I have observed only in Suckling.]

A headland; a cape; high land jutting into the sea.

The land did shoot out with a great promontory. Abbot.

Like one that stands upon a promontory,
And spies a far-off shore where he would tread. Shakspeare.

A forked mountain, or blue promontory,
With trees upon it, nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air. Shakspeare.

The waving sea can with each flood Bath some high promont. Suckling.

They, on their heads,
Main promontories flung, which in the air
Came shadowing, and oppress'd whole legions arm'd. Milton.

Every gust of rugged winds,
That blows from off each beaked promontory. Milton.

If you drink tea upon a promontory that overhangs the sea, it is preferable to an assembly. Pope.

To PROMOTE. v. a. [promoveo, promatus,
Latin.]

1. To forward; to advance.

Next to religion, let your care be to promote justice. Bacon.

Nothing lovelier can be found,
Than good works in her husband to promote. Milton.

He that talks deceitfully for truth, must hurt it more by his example, than he promotes it by his arguments. Atterbury.

Frictions of the extreme parts promote the flux of the juices in the joints. Arbutnot.

2. [promouvoir, Fr.] To elevate; to exalt;
to prefer.

I will promote thee unto very great honour. Numbers.

Shall I leave my fatness wherewith they honour
God and man, and go to be promoted over the trees? Judges.

Did I solicit thee
From darkness to promote me? Milton.

PROMO'TER. n. s. [promoteur, French;
from promote.]

1. Advancer; forwarder; encourager.

Knowledge hath received little improvement from the endeavours of many pretending promoters. Glanville.

Our Saviour makes this return, fit to be engraven in the hearts of all promoters of charity; verily, I say unto you, inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. Atterbury.

2. Informer; makebate. An obsolete use.

His cics be promoters, some trespass to spie. Tusser.

Informers and promoters oppress and ruin the estates of many of his best subjects. Drummond.

PROMOTION. n. s. [promotion, Fr. from promote.] Advancement; encouragement;
exaltation to some new honour or rank;
preferment.

Many fair promotions
Are daily given to enoble those,
That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble. Shakspeare.

The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his state at door 'mongst pursuivants. Shakspeare.

My rising is thy fall,
And my promotion will be thy destruction. Milton.

Thou youngest virgin-daughter of the skies,
Made in the last promotion of the blest;
Whose palms new pluck'd from paradise,
In spreading branches more sublimely rise. Dryden.
To PROMOVE. v. a. [promoveo, Latin; promouvoir, French.] To forward; to advance; to promote. Little used.
Never yet was honest man,
That ever drove the trade of love;
It is impossible, nor can Integrity our ends promote. Suckling.
Making useless offers, but promoting nothing. Fell.

PROMPT. adj. [prompt, French; promptus,
Latin.]

1. Quick; ready; acute; easy.

Very discerning and prompt in giving orders, as occasions required. Clarendon.

Prompt eloquence Flow'd from their lips, in prose or numerous verse. Milton.

To the stern sanction of th' offended sky,
My prompt obedience bows. Pope.

2. Quick; petulant.

I was too hasty to condemn unheard;
And you, perhaps, too prompt in your replies. Dryd.

3. Ready without hesitation; wanting no new motive.

Tell him, I'm prompt
To lay my crown at's feet, and there to kneel. Shak.

The brazen age,
Awarlike offspring, prompt to bloody rage. Dryden.

Still arose some rebel slave,
Prompter to sink the state, than he to save. Prior.

4. Ready; told down: as, prompt payment.

5. Easy; unobstructed.

The reception of light into the body of the building was very prompt, both from without and from within. Walton.

To PROMPT. v. a. [prontare, Italian.]

1. To assist by private instruction; to help at a loss.

Sitting in some place, where no man shall prompt him, let the child translate his lesson. Ascham.

You've put me now to such a part, which never
I shall discharge to th' life.

—Come, come, we'll prompt you. Shakespeare.

My voice shall sound as you do, prompt mine ear,
And I will stoop and humble my intents

To your well practis'd wife directions. Shakespeare.

None could hold the book so well to prompt and instruct this stage play, as she could. Bacon.

He needed not one to prompt him, because he could say the prayers by heart. Stillingfleet.

2. To dictate.

Every one some time or other dreams he is reading books, in which case the invention prompts so readily, that the mind is imposed on. Addison.

Grace shines around her with serene beams,
And whispering angels prompt her golden dreams. Pope.

3. To incite; to instigate.

The Volscians stand Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road Upon's again. Shakespeare.

Speak not by th' matter
Which your heart prompts you to, but with such words

But rooted in your tongue. Shakespeare.

If they prompt us to anger, their design makes use of it to a further end, that the mind, being thus disquieted, may not be easily composed to prayer. Duppa.

Rage prompted them at length, and found them arms. Milton.

Kind occasion prompts their warm desires. Pope.

4. To remind.

The inconceivable imperfections of ourselves will hourly prompt us our corruption, and loudly tell us we are sons of earth. Brown.

PROMPTER. n. s. [from prompt.]

1. One who helps a public speaker, by suggesting the word to him when he fakters.

VOL. II.

Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter. Shakespeare.

In florid impotence he speaks,
And as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks. Pope.

2. An admonisher; a reminder.

We understand our duty without a teacher, and acquit ourselves as we ought to do without a prompter. L'Estrange.

PROMPTITUDE. n. s. [promptitude, Fr.
from promptus, Lat.] Readiness; quickness.

PROMPTLY. adv. [from prompt.] Readily;
quickly; expeditiously.

He that does his merchandise cheerfully, promptly, and readily, and the works of religion slowly, it is a sign that his heart is not right with God. Taylor.

PROMPTNESS. n. s. [from prompt.] Readiness;
quickness; alacrity.

Had not this stop been given him by that accidental sickness, his great courage and promptness of mind would have carried him directly forward to the enemy, till he had met him in the open plains of Persia. South.

Firm and rigid muscles, strong pulse, activity, and promptness in animal actions, are signs of strong fibres. Arbutnot.

PROMPTUARY. n. s. [promptuaire, Fr. promptuarium, Latin.] A storehouse; a repository; a magazine.

This stratum is still expanded at top, serving as the seminary or promptuary, that furnisheth forth matter for the formation of animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.

PROMPTURE. n. s. [from prompt.] Suggestion; motion given by another; infligation. Not used.

Though he hath fallen by prompture of the blood;
Yer hath he in him such a mind of honour,
That had he twenty heads to tender down
On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up. Shakespeare.

To PROMULGATE. v. a. [promulgo, Lat.] To publish; to make known by open declaration.

Those, albeit I know he nothing so much hateth as to promulgate, yet I hope that this will occasion him to put forth divers other goodly works. Spens.

Those, to whom he entrusted the promulgating of the gospel, had far different instructions. Decay of Piety.

It is certain laws, by virtue of any sanction they receive from the promulgated will of the legislature, reach not a stranger, if by the law of nature every man hath not a power to punish offences against it. Locke.

PROMULGATION. n. s. [promulgatio, Lat.
from promulgate.] Publication; open exhibition.

The stream and current of this rule hath gone as far, it hath continued as long as the very promulgation of the gospel. Hooker.

External promulgation, or speaking thereof, did not alter the same, in respect of the inward form or quality. White.

The very promulgation of the punishment will be part of the punishment, and anticipate the execution. South.

PROMULGATOR. n. s. [from promulgate.]
Publisher; open teacher.

How groundless a calumny this is, appears from the sanctity of the christian religion, which excludes fraud and fall-hood; so also from the designments and aims of its first promulgators. Decay of Piety.

To PROMULGE. v. a. [from promulgo, Lat.] To promulgate; to publish; to teach openly.

The chief design of them is, to establish the truth of a new revelation in those countries, where it is first promulged and propagated. Atterbury.

PROMULGER. n. s. [from promulge.] Publisher; promulgator.

The promulgators of our religion, Jesus Christ and his apostles, raised men and women from the dead, not once only, but often. Atterbury.

PRONA'TOR. n. s. In anatomy, a muscle of the radius, of which there are two, that help to turn the palm downward. Diæ.

PRONE. adj. [pronus, Latin.]

1. Bending downward; not erect.

There wanted yet a creature not prone,
And brute as other creatures, but indu'd
With sanctity of reason, might erect
His stature, and upright with front serene Govern the rest. Milton.

2. Lying with the face downward: contrary to supine.

Upon these three positions in man, wherein the spine can only be at right lines with the thigh, arise those postures, prone, supine, and erect. Brown.

3. Precipitous; headlong; going downward.

Down thither prone in flight
He speeds, and through the vast ethereal sky
Sails between worlds. Milton.

4. Declivous; sloping.

Since the floods demand,
For their descent, a prone and sinking land:
Does not this due declivity declare
A wise director's providential care? Blackmore.

5. Inclined; propense; disposed. It has commonly an ill sense.

The labour of doing good, with the pleasure arising from the contrary, doth make men for the most part sloper to the one and proner to the other, than that duty, prescribed them by law, can prevail sufficiently with them. Hooker.

Those who are ready to confess him in judgment and profession, are very prone to deny him in their doings. South.

If we are prone to sedition, and delight in a change, there is no cure more proper than trade, which supplies business to the active, and wealth to the indigent. Addison.

Still prone to change, though still the slaves of state. Pope.

PRO'NENESS. n. s. [from prone.]

1. The state of bending downward; not erectness.

If erectness be taken, as it is largely opposed unto proneness, or the posture of animals looking downwards, carrying their venters, or opposite part to the spine, directly towards the earth, it may admit of question. Brown.

2. The state of lying with the face downward; not supineness.

3. Descent; declivity.

4. Inclination; propension; disposition to ill.

The holy spirit saw that mankind is unto virtue hardly drawn, and that righteousness is the less accounted of, by reason of the proneness of our affections to that which delighteth. Hooker.

The soul being first from nothing brought,
When God's grace fails her, doth to nothing fall;
And this declining proneness unto nought,
Is ev'n that sin that we are born withal. Davies.

He instituted this worship, because of the carnality of their hearts, and the proneness of the people to idolatry. Tillotson.

The proneness of good men to commiserate want,
in whatsoever shape it appears. Atterbury.

How great is the proneness of our nature, to comply with this temptation! Rogers.

PRONG. n. s. [pronghen, Dutch, to squeeze.
Minsbeaw.] A fork.

The cooks make no more ado, but slicing it into little gobbets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandys.

Whacum his sea-coal prong threw by,
And basely turn'd his back to fly. Hudibras.

Be mindful
With iron teeth of rakes and prongs to move
The crusted earth. Dryden.

PRO'NITY. n. s. [from prone.] Proneness.
Not used.

Of this mechanick primity, I do not see any good tendency. Mare.

PRONOUN. n. s. [pronom, Fr. pronomens, Latin.] A word that is used instead of the proper name.

I, thou, he; we, ye, they, are names given to persons, and used instead of their proper names, from whence they had the name of pronouns, as though they were not nouns themselves, but used instead of nouns. Clarke.

To PRONOUNCE. v. a. [prononcer, Fr. pronuncio, Lat.]

1. To speak; to utter.

He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth. Jeremiab.

2. To utter solemnly; to utter confidently.

She
So good a lady, that no tongue could ever Pronounce dishonour of her. Shakspeare.

I have pronounced the word, faith the Lord. Jer.

So was his will

Pronounce'd among the gods. Milton.

Sternly he pronounce'd the rigid interdiction. Milton.

Abalom pronounce'd a sentence of death against his brother. Locke.

3. To form or articulate by the organs of speech.

Language of man pronounce'd

By tongue of brute, and human sense express'd. Milt.

Though diversity of tongues continue, this would render the pronouncing them easier. Holder.

4. To utter rhetorically.

To PRONOUNCE. v. a. To speak with confidence or authority.

How confidently soever men pronounce of themselves, and believe that they are then most pious, when they are most eager and unquiet; yet 'tis sure this is far removed from the true genius of religion. Decay of Piety.

Every fool may believe, and pronounce confidently; but wise men will, in matters of discourse, conclude firmly, and in matters of fact, act surely. South.

PRONOUNCER. n. s. [from pronounce.] One who pronounces.

The pronouncer thereof shall be condemned in expences. Ayliffe.

PRONUNCIATION. u. s. [pronunciatio, from pronuncio, Lat. pronunciation, Fr.]

1. The act or mode of utterance.

The design of speaking being to communicate our thoughts by ready, easy, and graceful pronunciation, all kind of letters have been searched out, that were serviceable for the purpose. Holder.

It were easy to produce thousands of his verses, which are lame for want of half a foot, sometimes a whole one, and which no pronunciation can make otherwise. Dryden.

2. That part of rhetorick which teaches to speak in publick with pleasing utterance and graceful gesture.

PROOF. n. s. [from prove.]

1. Evidence; testimony; convincing token; convincing argument; means of conviction.

That they all have always so testified, I see not how we should possibly with a proof more palpable than this. Hooker.

This has neither evidence of truth, nor proof sufficient to give it warrant. Hooker.

Though the manner of their trials should be altered, yet the proof of every thing must needs be by the testimony of such persons as the parties shall produce. Spenser.

That which I shall report will bear no credit, were not the proof so high. Shakspeare.

One foul in both, whereof good proof

This day affords. Milton.

Things of several kinds may admit and require several sorts of proofs, all which may be good in their kind. And therefore nothing can be more irrational than for a man to doubt of, or deny the truth of any thing, because it cannot be made out, by such kind of proofs of which the nature of such a thing is not capable. They ought not to expect either sensible proof, or demonstration of such matters as are not capable of such proofs, supposing them to be true. Wilkins.

This, vers'd in death, th' infernal knight relates, And then for proof fulfill'd their common fates. Dryden.

These intervening ideas, which serve to shew the agreement of any two others, are called proofs. Locke.

2. Test; trial; experiment.

Retire or taste thy folly, and learn by proof, Hell-born! not to contend with spirits of heav'n. Milton.

Samson,

This day to Dagon is a solemn feast: Thy strength they know surpassing human race, And now some publick proof thereof require To honour this great feast. Milton.

When the imagination hath contrived the frame of such an instrument, and conceives that the event must infallibly answer its hopes, yet then does it strangely deceive in the proof. Wilkins.

Gave, while he taught, and edify'd the more, Because he shew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor. Dryden.

My paper gives a timorous writer an opportunity of putting his abilities to the proof. Addison.

Here for ever must I stay,

Sad proof how well a lover can obey. Pope.

3. Firm temper; impenetrability; the state of being wrought and hardened, till the expected strength is found by trial to be attained.

Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers, And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. Shaks.

To me the cries of fighting fields are charms, Keen be my fabre, and of proof my arms; I ask no other blessing of my stars. Dryden.

See arms of proof, both for myself and thee; Chuse thou the best. Dryden.

4. Armour hardened till it will abide a certain trial.

He Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof, Confronted him. Shakspeare.

5. In printing, the rough draft of a sheet when first pulled.

PROOF. adj. [This word, though used as an adjective, is only elliptically put for of proof.]

1. Impenetrable; able to resist.

Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight

With hearts more proof than shields. Shakspeare.

Opportunity I hear have had To try thee, sift thee, and confels have found thee Proof against all temptation, as a rock Of adamant. Milton.

He past expression lov'd, Proof to disdain, and not to be remov'd. Dryden.

When the mind is thoroughly tinctured, the man will be proof against all oppositions. Collier.

Guileless of hate, and proof against desire; That all things weighs, and nothing can admire. Dryden.

When a capuchin, thought proof against bribes, had undertaken to carry on the work, he died a little after. Addison.

2. It has either to or against before the power to be resisted.

Imagin'd wife,

Constant, mature, proof against all assaults. Milton.

Deep in the snowy Alps, a lump of ice By frost was harden'd to a mighty price;

Proof to the sun it now securely lies, And the warm dog-star's hottest rage defies. Addif.

The god of day, To make him proof against the burning ray,

His temples with celestial ointment wet. Addison.

PROOFLESS. adj. [from proof.] Unproved; wanting evidence.

Some were so manifestly weak and proofless, that he must be a very courteous adversary, that can grant them. Boyle.

To PROP. v. a. [propen, Dutch.]

1. To support by placing something under or against.

What we by day

Lop overgrown, or prop, or bind,

One night derides. Milione.

2. To support by standing under or against.

Like these, earth unsupported keeps its place, Though no fix'd bottom props the weighty mass. Creech.

Eternal snows the growing mass supply, Till the bright mountains prop th' incumbent sky; As Atlas fix'd each hoary pile appears. Pope.

3. To sustain; to support.

The nearer I find myself verging to that period, which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I prop myself upon those few supports that are left me. Pope.

PROP. n. s. [proppe, Dutch.] A support; a stay; that on which any thing rests.

The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop. Shakspeare.

You take my house, when you do take the prop That doth sustain my house; you take my life, When you do take the means whereby I live. Shakspeare.

Some plants creep along the ground, or wind about other trees or props, and cannot support themselves. Bacon.

That he might on many props repose, He strength's his own, and who his part did take. Daniel.

Again, if by the body's prop we stand, If on the body's life, her life depend, As Meleager's on the fatal brand,

The body's good she only would intend. Daniel.

Fairest unsupported flower From her best prop so far. Milton.

The current of his vict'ries found no stop, Till Cromwell came, his party's chiefest prop. Waller.

'Twas a considerable time before the great fragments that fell rested in a firm posture; for the props and stays, whereby they leaned one upon another, often failed. Burnet.

The props return Into thy house, that bore the burden'd vines. Dryden.

Had it been possible to find out any real and firm foundation for arianism to rest upon, it would never have been left to stand upon artificial props, or to subsist by subtlety and management. Waterland.

PRO'PAGABLE. adj. [from propagate.] Such as may be spread; such as may be continued by succession.

Such creatures as are produced each by its peculiar seed, constitute a distinct propagable sort of creatures. Boyle.

To PRO'PAGATE. v. a. [propago, Lat.]

1. To continue or spread by generation or successive production.

All that I eat, or drink, or shall beget, Is propagated curse! Milton.

Is it an elder brother's duty so To propagate his family and name;

You would not have yours die and buried with you? Orway.

From hills and dales the cheerful cries rebound; For echo hunts along, and propagates the sound. Dryden.

2. To extend; to widen.

I have upon a high and pleasant hill Feign'd fortune to be thron'd: the base o' th' mount

Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures, That labour on the bosom of this sphere

To propagate their states. Shakspeare.

3. To carry on from place to place; to promote.

Some have thought the propagating of religion by arms not only lawful, but meritorious. Decay of Piety.

Who are those that truth must propagate, Within the confines of my father's state? Dryden.

Those who seek truth only, and desire to propagate nothing else, freely expose their principles to the test. Locke.

Because dense bodies conserve their heat a long time, and the densest bodies conserve their heat the longest, the vibrations of their parts are of a lasting nature; and therefore may be propagated along solid fibres of uniform dense matter to a great distance.

for conveying into the brain the impressions made upon all the organs of sense. Newton.

4. To increase; to promote.
Griefs of mine own lie heavy in my breast,
Which thou wilt propagate, to have them prest
With more of thine. Shakspeare.
Sooth'd with his future fame,
And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.

5. To generate.
Superstitious notions, propagated in fancy, are hardly ever totally eradicated. Clarissa.

To PROPAGATE, v. n. To have offspring.
No need that thou
Should'st propagate, already infinite,
And through all numbers absolute, though one. Milton.

PROPAGATION, n. f. [propagatio, Latin; propagation, French; from propagate.]
Continuance or diffusion by generation or successive production.
Men have souls rather by creation than propagation. Hooker.
There are other secondary ways of the propagation of it, as lying in the same bed. Wifeman.
There is not in all nature any spontaneous generation, but all come by propagation, wherein chance hath not the least part. Ray.
Old stakes of olive trees in plants revive;
But nobler vines by propagation thrive. Dryden.

PROPAGATOR, n. f. [from propagate.]
1. One who continues by successive production.
2. A spreader; a promoter.
Socrates, the greatest propagator of morality, and a martyr for the unity of the Godhead, was so famous for this talent, that he gained the name of the Drole. Addison.

To PROPEL, v. a. [propello, Latin.] To drive forward.
Avicen witnesses the blood to be frothy that is propelled out of a vein of the breast. Harvey.
This motion, in some human creatures, may be weak in respect to the viscosity of what is taken, so as not to be able to propel it. Arbutnot.
That overplus of motion would be too feeble and languid to propel so vast and ponderous a body, with that prodigious velocity. Bentley.

To PROPE'ND, v. n. [propendo, Latin, to hang forward.] To incline to any part;
to be disposed in favour of any thing.
My sprightly brethren, I propend to you.
In resolution to keep Helen still. Shakspeare.

PROPE'NDENCY, n. f. [from propend.]
1. Inclination or tendency of desire to any thing.
2. [from propendo, Latin, to weigh.] Pre-consideration; attentive deliberation;
perpendency.
An act above the animal actions, which are transient, and admit not of that attention, and propendency of actions. Hale.

PROPE'NSE, adj. [propensus, Lat.] Inclined; disposed. It is used both of good and bad.
Women, propense and inclinable to holiness, be edified in good things, rather than carried away as captives. Hooker.
I have brought scandal
In feeble hearts, propense enough before
To waver, or fall off, and join with idols. Milton.

PROPE'NSION, } n. f. [propension, French; PROPE'NSITY, } propensio, Latin; from propense.]
1. Moral inclination; disposition to any thing good or bad.
Some miscarriages might escape, rather through necessities of state, than any propensivity of myself to
So forcible are our propensions to mutiny, that we equally take occasions from benefits or injuries.
Government of the Tongue.
Let there be but propensivity, and bent of will to religion, and there will be sedulity and indefatigable industry. South.

It requires a critical nicety to find out the genius or the propensions of a child. L'Estrange.
The natural propension, and the inevitable occasions of complaint, accidents of fortune. Temple.
He assists us with a measure of grace, sufficient to over-balance the corrupt propensivity of the will. Rogers.

2. Natural tendency.
Bodies, that of themselves have no propensions to any determinate place, do nevertheless move constantly and perpetually one way. Digby.
This great attrition must produce a great propensity to the putrescent alkaline condition of the fluids. Arbutnot.

PROPER, adj. [propre, Fr. proprius, Lat.]
1. Peculiar; not belonging to more; not common.
As for the virtues that belong unto moral righteousness and honesty of life, we do not mention them, because they are not proper unto christian men as they are christian, but do concern them as they are men. Hooker.
Men of learning hold it for a slip in judgment, when offer is made to demonstrate that as proper to one thing, which reason findeth common unto many. Hooker.
No sense the precious joys conceives,
Which in her private contemplations be;
For then the ravish'd spirit the senses leaves,
Hath her own pow'rs and proper actions free. Davies.
Of nought no creature ever formed ought,
For that is proper to th' Almighty's hand. Davies.
Dufresnoy's rules, concerning the posture of the figures, are almost wholly proper to painting, and admit not any comparison with poetry. Dryden.
Outward objects, that are extrinsecal to the mind, and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsecal and proper to itself, which become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke.
They professed themselves servants of Jehovah their God, in a relation and respect peculiar and proper to themselves. Nelson.

2. Noting an individual.
A proper name may become common, when given to several beings of the same kind; as Cæsar. Watts.

3. One's own. It is joined with any of the possessives: as, my proper, their proper.
The bloody book of law
You shall yourself read in the bitter letter,
After your own sense; yea, though our proper son Stood in your action. Shakspeare.
Court the age
With somewhat of your proper rage. Waller.
If we might determine it, our proper conceptions would be all voted axioms. Glanville.
Now learn the diff'rence at your proper cost,
Betwixt true valour and an empty boast. Dryden.

4. Natural; original.
In our proper motion we ascend
Up to our native seat. Milton.

5. Fit; accommodated; adapted; suitable;
qualified.
In Athens all was pleasure, mirth, and play,
All proper to the spring, and sprightly May. Dryd.
He is the only proper person of all others for the epic poem, who, to his natural endowments of a large invention, a ripe judgment, and a strong memory, has joined the knowledge of the liberal arts. Dryden.
In debility, from great loss of blood, wine and all aliment that is easily assimilated or turned into blood, are proper: for blood is required to make blood. Arbutnot.

6. Exact; accurate; just.
7. Not figurative.
Those parts of nature, into which the chaos was divided, they signified by dark names, which we have expressed in their plain and proper terms. Burnet.

8. It seems in Shakspeare to signify, mere;
pure.
See thyself, devil;
Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman. King Lear.

9. [propre, French.] Elegant; pretty.
Moses was a proper child. Hebrews.

10. Tall; lusty; handsome with bulk. A low word.
At last she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the properest man in Italy. Shakspeare.
A proper goodly fox was carrying to execution. L'Estrange.

PROPERLY, adv. [from proper.]
1. Fitly; suitably.
2. In a strict sense.
What dies but what has life
And sin? the body properly hath neither. Milton.
The miseries of life are not properly owing to the unequal distribution of things. Swift.
There is a sense in which the works of every man,
good as well as bad, are properly his own. Rogers.

PROPERNESS, n. f. [from proper.]
1. The quality of being proper.
2. Talents.

PROPERTY, n. f. [from proper.]
1. Peculiar quality.
What special property or quality is that, which being no where found but in sermons, maketh them effectual to save souls? Hooker.
A secondary essential mode, is any attribute of a thing, which is not of primary consideration, and is called a property. Watts.

2. Quality; disposition.
'Tis conviction, not force, that must induce assent; and sure the logick of a conquering sword has no great property that way; silence it may, but convince it cannot. Decay of Piety.
It is the property of an old sinner to find delight in reviewing his own villainies in others. South.

3. Right of possession.
Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, sprung from the same original, and were to defend by the same rules. Locke.
Property, whose original is from the right a man has to use any of the inferior creatures, for subsistence and comfort, is for the sole advantage of the proprietor, so that he may even destroy the thing that he has property in. Locke.

4. Possession held in one's own right.
For numerous blessings yearly show'r'd,
And property with plenty crown'd,
Accept our pious praise. Dryden.

5. The thing possessed.
'Tis a thing impossible
I should love thee but as a property. Shakspeare.
No wonder such men are true to a government, where liberty runs so high, where property is so well secured. Swift.

6. Nearness or right. I know not which is the sense in the following lines.
Here I disclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity, and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me,
Hold thee. Shakspeare.

7. Something useful; an appendage: a theatrical term.
I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. Shakspeare.
The purple garments raise the lawyer's fees,
High pomp and state are useful properties. Dryden.
Greenfield was the name of the property man in that time, who furnished implements for the actors. Pope.

8. Property for propriety. Any thing peculiarly adapted. Not used.
Our poets excel in grandity and gravity, smoothness and property, in quickness and briefness. Camden.

To PRO'PERTY, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To invest with qualities.
His rear'd arm
Crested the world; his voice was property'd
As all the tuned spheres. Shakspeare.

2. To seize or retain as something owned, or in which one has a right; to appropriate; to hold. This word is not now used in either meaning.

His large fortune
Subdues and properties to his love and tendance
All sorts of hearts. Shakspeare.
They have here propertied me, keep me in darkness, and do all they can to face me out of my wits. Shakspeare.

I am too highborn to be propertied,
To be a secondary at controul. Shakspeare.

PROPHASIS. n. f. [πρόφασις.] In medicine, a foreknowledge of diseases.

PRO'PHECY. n. f. [προφητεία; prophetic, Fr.] A declaration of something to come; prediction.

Mix'd with thy works, their life no bounds shall see. Tickel.

2. To preach. A scriptural sense.

Prophecy unto the wind, prophecy son of man. Ezekiel.

The elders of the Jews builded, and prospered hrough the prophecying of Haggai. Ezra.

PRO'PHET. n. f. [prophete, Fr. προφήτης.]

1. One who tells future events; a predictor; a foreteller.

Ev'ry flower
Did as a prophet weep what it foresaw,
In Hector's wrath. Shakspeare.
Jesters oft prove prophets. Shakspeare.
O prophet of glad tidings! finisher
Of utmost hope! Milton.

He lov'd so fast,
As if he fear'd each day wou'd be her last;
Too true a prophet to foresee the fate,
That should so soon divide their happy state. Dryden.
God, when he makes the prophet, does not unmake
the man. Locke.

2. One of the sacred writers empowered by God to display futurity.

His champions are the prophets and apostles. Shakspeare.

It buildeth her faith and religion upon the sacred and canonical scriptures of the holy prophets and apostles, as upon her main and prime foundation. White.

PRO'PHETESS. n. f. [propheteffe, Fr. from prophet.] A woman that foretells future events.

He shall split thy very heart with sorrow,
And say poor Marg'ret was a propheteffe. Shaksp.

That it is consonant to the word of God, so in singing to answer, the practice of Miriam the propheteffe, when she answered the men in her song,
will approve. Peacham.

If my love but once were crown'd,
Fair propheteffe, my grief would cease. Prior.

PROPHETICAL. } adj. [prophetique, Fr.
PROPHE'TICK. } from prophet.]

1. Foreseeing or foretelling future events.

Say, why
Upon this blasted heath you stop our way,
With such prophetick greeting? Shakspeare.
The counsel of a wife and then prophetical friend was forgotten. Wotton.
Some perfumes procure prophetical dreams. Bacon.

Till old experience do attain
To something like prophetick strain. Milton.
Some famous prophetick pictures represent the fate of England by a mole, a creature blind and busy, smooth and deceitful, continually working under ground, but now and then to be discerned in the surface. Stillingfleet.

No arguments made a stronger impression on these pagan converts, than the predictions relating to our Saviour in those old prophetick writings deposited among the hands of the greatest enemies to christianity, and owned by them to have been extant many ages before his appearance. Addison.

2. It has of before the thing foretold.

The more I know, the more my fears augment,
And fears are oft prophetick of th' event. Dryden.

PROPHE'TICALLY. adv. [from prophetical.] With knowledge of futurity; in manner of a prophecy.

He is so prophetically proud of an heroical cud-gelling, that he raves in saying nothing. Shakspeare.

This great success among Jews and Gentiles, part of it historically true at the compiling of these articles, and part of it prophetically true then, and fulfilled afterward, was a most effectual argument to give authority to this faith. Hammond.
She sigh'd, and thus prophetically spoke. Dryden.

To PRO'PHETIZE. v. n. [prophetiser, Fr. from prophet.] To give predictions.
Not in use.

Nature else hath conference
With profound sleep, and so doth warning send
By prophetizing dreams. Daniel.

PROPHYLACTICK. adj. [προφυλακτικός, from προφυλασσω.] Preventive; preservative.

Medicine is distributed into prophylactick, or the art of preserving health; and therapeutick, or the art of restoring health. Watts.

PROPINQUITY. n. f. [propinquit, Lat.]

1. Nearness; proximity; neighbourhood.

They draw the retina nearer to the crystalline humour, and by their relaxation suffer it to return to its natural distance according to the exigency of the object, in respect of distance or propinquity. Ray.

2. Nearness of time.

Thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolations, and that their tranquillity was of no longer duration, than those soon decaying fruits of summer. Brown.

3. Kindred; nearness of blood.

Here I disclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity, and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me
Hold thee. Shakspeare.

PROPI'TIABLE. adj. [from propitiate.]

Such as may be induced to favour; such as may be made propitious.

To PROPI'TIATE. v. a. [propitio, Lat.]

To induce to favour; to gain; to conciliate; to make propitious.

You, hier priest, declare
What off'rings may propitiate the fair,
Rich orient pearl, bright stones that ne'er decay,
Or polish'd lines which longer last than they. Waller.

They believe the affairs of human life to be managed by certain spirits under him, whom they endeavour to propitiate by certain rites. Stillingfleet.

Vengeance shall pursue the inhuman coast,
Till they propitiate thy offended ghost. Dryden.

Let fierce Achilles, dreadful in his rage,
The god propitiate, and the pest alluage. Pope.

PROPI'TIATION. n. f. [propiciation, Fr. from propitiate.]

1. The act of making propitious.

2. The atonement; the offering by which propitioufness is obtained.

He is the propitiation for the sins of the whole world. 1 John.

PROPI'TIATOR. n. f. [from propitiate.]

One that propitiates.

PROPI'TIATORY. adj. [propiciatoire, Fr. from propitiate.] Having the power to make propitious.

Is not this more than giving God thanks for their virtues, when a propitiatory sacrifice is offered for their honour? Stillingfleet.

PROPI'TIOUS. adj. [propitius, Lat. propice, Fr.] Favourable; kind.

T' assuage the force of this new flame,
And make thee more propitious in my need,
I mean to sing the praises of thy name. Spenser.

Let not my words offend thee,
My Maker, be propitious while I speak! Milton.

Indulgent god! propitious pow'r to Troy,

Swift to relieve, unwilling to destroy. Dryden.

Would but thy sister Marcia be propitious

To thy friend's vows. Addison.

Ere Phœbus rose, he had implor'd

Propitious heav'n. Pope.

PROPI'TIOUSLY. adv. [from propitius.]

Favourably; kindly.

So when a muse propitiously invites,

Improve her favours, and indulge her flights. Rejcomant.

PROPI'TIOUSNESS. n. f. [from propitius.]

Favourableness; kindness.

All these joined with the propitiousness of climate to that sort of tree and the length of age it shall stand and grow, may produce an oak. Temple.

PROPLASM. n. f. [πρό and πλάσμα.]

Mould; matrix.

Those shells serving as proplasms or moulds to the matter which so fill'd them, limited and determined its dimensions and figure. Woodward.

PROPLASTICE. n. f. [προπλαστική.] The art of making moulds for casting.

PROPO'NENT. n. f. [from proponens, Lat.]

One that makes a proposal, or lays down a position.

For mysterious things of faith rely
On the proponent, heaven's authority. Dryden.

PROPORTION. n. f. [proportion, Fr. proportio, Lat.]

1. Comparative relation of one thing to another; ratio.

Let any man's wisdom determine by lessening the territory, and increasing the number of inhabitants, what proportion is requisite to the peopling of a region in such a manner, that the land shall be neither too narrow for those whom it feedeth, nor capable of a greater multitude. Raleigh.

By proportion to these rules, we may judge of the obligation that lies upon all sorts of injurious persons. Taylor.

Things nigh equivalent and neighb'ring value
By lot are parted; but high heav'n thy share,

In equal balance weigh'd 'gainst earth and hell,

Flings up the adverse scale, and shuns proportion. Prior.

2. Settled relation of comparative quantity; equal degree.

Greater visible good does not always raise men's desires, in proportion to the greatness it is acknowledged to have, though every little trouble sets us on work to get rid of it. Locke.

He must be little skilled in the world, who think that men's talking much or little shall hold propor- tion only to their knowledge. Locke.

Several nations are recovered out of their ignorance, in proportion as they converse more or less with those of the reformed churches. Addison.

In proportion as this resolution grew, the terrors before us seemed to vanish. Taller.

3. Harmonick degree.

PRO

His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue.

Milton.

4. Symmetry; adaptation of one to another.

Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereunto: and to proportion as well excesses as defects, are opposite.

Hooker.

It must be mutual in proportion due
Giv'n and receiv'd.

Milton.

No man of the present age is equal in the strength, proportion and knitting of his limbs, to the Hercules of Farnese.

Dryden.

The proportions are so well observed, that nothing appears to an advantage, or distinguishes itself above the rest.

Addison.

Harmony, with ev'ry grace,
Plays in the fair proportions of her face.

Mrs. Carter.

5. Form; size.

All things receiv'd, do such proportion take,
As those things have, wherein they are receiv'd;
So little glasses little faces make,
And narrow webs on narrow frames are weav'd.

Davies.

To PROPORTION. v. a. [proportionner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To adjust by comparative relation.

Till body up to spirit work, in bounds
Proportion'd to each kind.

Milton.

In the loss of an object, we do not proportion our grief to the real value it bears, but to the value our fancies set upon it.

Addison.

2. To form symmetrically.

Nature had proportioned her without any fault, quickly to be discovered by the senses; yet altogether seemed not to make up that harmony that cupid delights in.

Sidney.

PROPORTIONABLE. adj. [from proportion.]

Adjusted by comparative relation; such as is fit.

His commandments are not grievous, because he offers us an assistance proportionable to the difficulty.

Tillopson.

It was enlivened with an hundred and twenty trumpets, assisted with a proportionable number of other instruments.

Addison.

PROPORTIONABLY. adv. [from proportion.]

According to proportion; according to comparative relation.

The mind ought to examine all the grounds of probability, and upon a due balancing the whole, reject or receive it proportionably to the preponderancy of the greater grounds of probability, on one side or the other.

Locke.

The parts of a great thing are great, and there are proportionably large estates in a large country.

Arbutnot.

Though religion be more eminently necessary to those of stations of authority, yet these qualities are proportionably conducive to publick happiness in every inferior relation.

Rogers.

PROPORTIONAL. adj. [proportionel, Fr. from proportion.]

Having a settled comparative relation; having a certain degree of any quality compared with something else.

The serpent lives,
Lives, as thou said'st, and gains to live as man Higher degree of life, inducement strong
To us, as likely tasting to attain Proportional scent, which cannot be
But to be gods or angels.

Milton.

Four numbers are said to be proportional, when the first containeth, or is contained by the second, as often as the third containeth, or is contained by the fourth.

Cocker.

If light be swifter in bodies than in vacuo, in the proportion of the sines which measure the refraction of the bodies, the forces of the bodies to reflect and refract light, are very nearly proportional to the densities of the same bodies.

Newton.

PROPORTIONALITY. n. f. [from proportional.] The quality of being proportional.

PRO

All sense, as grateful, dependeth upon the equality or the proportionality of the motion or impression made.

Grew.

PROPORTIONALLY. adv. [from proportional.] In a stated degree.

If these circles, whilst their centres keep their distances and positions, could be made less in diameter, their interfering one with another, and by consequence the mixture of the heterogeneous rays, would be proportionally diminished.

Newton.

PROPORTIONATE. adj. [from proportion]

Adjusted to something else, according to a certain rate or comparative relation.

The connection between the end and any means is adequate, but between the end and means proportionate.

Grew.

The use of spectacles, by an adequate connection of truths, gave men occasion to think of microscopes and telescopes; but the invention of burning glasses depended on a proportionate; for that figure, which contracts the species of any body, that is, the rays by which it is seen, will, in the same proportion, contract the heat wherewith the rays are accompanied.

Grew.

In the state of nature, one man comes by no absolute power to use a criminal according to the passion or heats of his own will; but only to retribute to him, so far as conscience dictates, what is proportionate to his transgression.

Locke.

To PROPORTIONATE. v. a. [from proportion.] To adjust according to settled rates to something else.

The parallelism and due proportionated inclination of the axis of the earth.

Myre.

Since every single particle hath an innate gravitation toward all others, proportionated by matter and distance, it evidently appears, that the outward atoms of the chaos would necessarily tend inwards, and descend from all quarters towards the middle of the whole space.

Bentley.

PROPORTIONATENESS. n. f. [from proportionate.] The state of being by comparison adjusted.

By this congruity of those faculties to their proper objects, and by the fitness and proportionateness of these objective impressions upon their respective faculties, accommodated to their reception, the sensible nature hath so much of perception, as is necessary for its sensible being.

Hale.

PROPOSAL. n. f. [from propose.]

1. Scheme or design propounded to consideration or acceptance.

If our proposals once again were heard,
We should compel them to a quick result.

Milton.

The work you mention, will sufficiently recommend itself, when your name appears with the proposals.

Addison.

2. Offer to the mind.

Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than refuse it.

South.

This truth is not likely to be entertained readily upon the first proposal.

Atterbury.

To PROPOSE. v. a. [proposer, Fr. propono,

Lat.] To offer to the consideration.

Raphael to Adam's doubt propos'd,
Benevolent and facil thus reply'd.

Milton.

My design is to treat only of those, who have chiefly propos'd to themselves the principal reward of their labours.

Tatler.

In learning any thing, there should be as little as possible first propos'd to the mind at once, and that being understood, proceed then to the next adjoining part.

Watts.

To PROPOSE. v. n. To lay schemes. Not in use.

Run thee into the parlour,
There shalt thou find my cousin Beatrice,
Proposing with the prince and Claudio.

Shakspeare.

PROPOSER. n. f. [from propose.] One that offers any thing to consideration.

Faith is the assent to any proposition, not made out by the deductions of reason, but upon the credit of the proposer as coming from God.

Locke.

PRO

He provided a statute, that whoever propos'd any alteration to be made, should do it with a rope about his neck: if the matter propos'd were generally approved, then it should pass into a law; if it went in the negative, the proposer to be immediately hanged.

Swift.

PROPOSITION. n. f. [propositio, Fr. pro-

positio, Lat.]

1. One of the three parts of a regular argument.

The first proposition of the precedent argument is not necessary.

White.

2. A sentence in which any thing is affirmed or decreed.

Chrysippus, labouring how to reconcile these two propositions, that all things are done by fate, and yet that something is in our own power, cannot extricate himself.

Hammond.

Contingent propositions are of a dubious quality,
and they cause opinion only, and not divine faith.

White.

The compounding the representation of things, with an affirmation or negation, makes a proposition.

Hale.

3. Proposal; offer of terms.

The enemy sent propositions, such as upon delivery of a strong fortified town, after a handsome defence, are usually granted.

Clydenon.

PROPOSITIONAL. adj. [from proposition.]

Considered as a proposition.

If it has a singular subject in its propositional sense, it is always ranked with universals.

Watts.

To PROPOUND. v. n. [propono, Lat.]

1. To offer to consideration; to propose.

The parliament, which now is held, decreed
Whatever pleas'd the king but to propound.

Daniel.

To leave as little as I may unto fancy, which is wild and irregular, I will propound a rule.

Wotton.

Dar'st thou to the Son of God propound
To worship thee?

Milton.

The existence of the church hath been propounded
as an object of our faith in every age of christianity.

Pearson.

The greatest stranger must propound the argument.

More.

The arguments, which christianity propounds to us, are reasonable encouragements to bear sufferings patiently.

Tillopson.

2. To offer; to exhibit.

A spirit rais'd from depth of under-ground,
That shall make answer to such questions,
As by your grace shall be propounded him.

Shakspeare.

PROPOUNDER. n. f. [from propound.] He that propounds; he that offers; proposer.

PROPRIETARY. n. f. [proprietaire, Fr. from propriety.]

Possessor in his own right.

'Tis a mistake to think ourselves stewards in some of God's gifts, and proprietaries in others: they are all equally to be employed, according to the designation of the donor.

Gov. of the Tongue.

PROPRIETARY. adj. Belonging to a certain owner.

Though sheep, which are proprietary, are seldom marked, yet they are not apt to straggle.

Grew.

PROPRIETOR. n. f. [from proprius, Lat.]

A possessor in his own right.

Man, by being master of himself, and proprietor of his own person, and the actions or labour of it, had still in himself the great foundation of property.

Locke.

Though they are scattered on the wings of the morning, and remain in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall his right hand fetch them out, and lead them home to their ancient proprietor.

Rogers.

PROPRIETRESS. n. f. [from proprietor.]

A female possessor in her own right; a mistress.

A big-bellied bitch borrowed another bitch's kennel to lay her burden in; the proprietress demanded possession, but the other begged her excuse.

L'Estrange.

PROPRIETY. n. f. [propriété, Fr. proprietas, Lat.]

1. Peculiarity of possession; exclusive right.

You that have promis'd to yourselves propriety in love,
Know women's hearts like straws do move.

Benefit of peace, and vacation for piety, render it necessary by laws to secure propriety. Hammond.

Hail, wedded love! mysterious law, true source Of human offspring, sole propriety

In Paradise! of all things common else. Milton.

They secure propriety and peace. Dryden.

To that we owe not only the safety of our persons and the propriety of our possessions, but our improvement in the several arts. Atterbury.

2. Accuracy; justness.

Common use, that is the rule of propriety, affords some aid to settle the signification of language. Locke.

PROPT. for propped. [from prop.] Sustained by some prop.

See in her cell sad Eloisa spread,
Prompt on some tomb, a neighbour of the dead. Pope.

PROPU'GN. v. a. [propugno, Latin.]

Thankfulness is our meet tribute to those sacred champions for propugning of our faith. Hammond.

PROPUGNATION. n. f. [propugnatio, from propugno, Lat.] Defence.

What propugnatio is in one man's valour,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Shakspeare.

PROPUGNER. n. f. [from propugn.] A defender.

So zealous propugners are they of their native creed, that they are importunately diligent to instruct men in it, and in all the little sophistries for defending it. Government of the Tongue.

PROPULSION. n. f. [propulsus, Lat.] The act of driving forward.

Joy worketh by propulsion of the moisture of the brain, when the spirits dilate and occupy more room. Bacon.

The evanescent solid and fluid will scarce differ, and the extremities of those small canals will by propulsion be carried off with the fluid continually. Arbutnot.

PRORE. n. f. [prora, Latin.] The prow; the forepart of a ship. A poetical word used for a rhyme.

There no vessel, with vermilion prore,
Or bark of traffick, glides from shore to shore. Pope.

PROROGATION. n. f. [prorogatio, from prorogo, Lat. prorogation, Fr.]

1. Continuance; state of lengthening out to a distant time; prolongation.

The fullness and effluence of man's enjoyments in the state of innocence, might seem to leave no place for hope, in respect of any farther addition, but only of the prorogation and future continuance of what already he possessed. South.

2. Interruption of the session of parliament by the regal authority.

It would seem extraordinary, if an inferior court should take a matter out of the hands of the high court of parliament, during a prorogation. Swift.

PROROGUE. v. a. [prorogo, Lat. proroger, Fr.]

1. To protract; to prolong.

He prorogued his government, still threatening to dismiss himself from publick cares. Dryden.

2. To put off; to delay.

My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death prorogued, wanting of thy love. Shakspeare.

3. To withhold the session of parliament to a distant time.

By the king's authority alone they are assembled, and by him alone are they prorogued and dissolved, but each house may adjourn itself. Bacon.

PRORUPTION. n. f. [proruptus, from prorumpo, Lat.] The act of bursting out.

Others ground this disruption upon their continued or protracted time of delivery, whereat, excluding but one a day, the latter brood, impatient by a forcible prorruption, anticipates their period of exclusion. Brown.

PROSA'ICK. adj. [prosaïque, Fr. prosaicus, from prosa, Lat.] Belonging to prose; resembling prose.

TO PROSCRIBE. v. a. [proscribo, Lat.]

1. To censure capitally; to doom to destruction.

Robert Vere, earl of Oxford, through the malice of the peers, was banished the realm, and proscribed. Spenser.

I hid for thee
Thy murder of thy brother, being so brib'd,
And writ him in the list of my proscrib'd
After thy fact. Ben Jonson.

Follow'd and pointed at by fools and boys,
But dreaded and proscrib'd by men of sense. Roscommon.

In the year 325, as is well known, the Arian doctrines were proscribed and anathematized in the famous council of Nice, consisting of 318 bishops, very unanimous in their resolutions, excepting a few reclaimants. Waterland.

2. To interdict. Not in use.

He shall be found,
And taken or proscrib'd this happy ground. Dryd.

Some utterly proscribe the name of chance, as a word of impious and profane signification; and indeed, if taken by us in that sense in which it was used by the heathen, so as to make any thing casual, in respect of God himself, their exception ought justly to be admitted. South.

PROSCRIBER. n. f. [from proscribo.] One that dooms to destruction.

The triumvir and prosciber had descended to us in a more hideous form, if the emperor had not taken care to make friends of Virgil and Horace. Dryden.

PROSCRIPTION. n. f. [proscriptio, Latin.]

Doom to death or confiscation.

You took his voice who should be prickt to die,
In our black sentence and proscription. Shaksp.

Sylla's old troops
Are needy and poor; and have but left t' expect From Catiline new bills and new proscriptions. Ben Jonson.

For the title of proscription or forfeiture, the emperor hath been judge and party, and justified himself. Bacon.

PROSE. n. f. [prose, French; prosa, Latin.]

Language not restrained to harmonick sounds or set number of syllables; discourse not metrical.

Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme. Milt.

The reformation of prose was owing to Boccace, who is the standard of purity in the Italian tongue, though many of his phrases are become obsolete. Dryden.

A poet lets you into the knowledge of a device better than a prose writer, as his descriptions are often more diffuse. Addison.

Prose men alone for private ends,
I thought, forsook their ancient friends. Prior.

I will be still your friend in prose:
Esteem and friendship to express,
Will not require poetick drefs. Swift.

My head and heart thus flowing through my quill,
Verse man and prose man, term me which you will. Pope.

TO PROSECUTE. v. a. [prosequor, prosecutus, Lat.]

1. To pursue; to continue endeavours after any thing.

I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia,
Why should not I then prosecute my right? Shaksp.

I must not omit a father's timely care,
To prosecute the means of thy deliverance
By ransom. Milton.

That which is morally good is to be desired and prosecuted; that which is evil is to be avoided. Wilkins.

He prosecuted this purpose with strength of argument and close reasoning, without incoherent fallies. Locke.

2. To continue; to carry on.

The same reasons, which induced you to entertain this war, will induce you also to prosecute the same. Hayward.

All resolute to prosecute their ire,
Seeking their own and country's cause to free. Daniel.

He infested Oxford, which gave them the more reason to prosecute the fortifications. Clarendon.

With louder cries
She prosecutes her griefs, and thus replies. Dryden.

3. To proceed in consideration or disquisition of any thing.

An infinite labour to prosecute those things, so far as they might be exemplified in religious and civil actions. Hooker.

4. To pursue by law; to sue criminally.

5. To prosecute differs from to persecute: to persecute always implies some cruelty, malignity, or injustice; to prosecute, is to proceed by legal measures, either with or without just cause.

PROSECUTION. n. f. [from prosecute.]

1. Pursuit; endeavour to carry on.

Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last; they are promising in the beginning, but they fail, jade, and tire in the prosecution. South.

Their jealousy of the British power, as well as their prosecutions of commerce and pursuits of universal monarchy, will fix them in their aversions towards us. Addison.

2. Suit against a man in a criminal cause.

Persons at law may know, when they are unfit to communicate till they have put a stop to their guilt, and when they are fit for the same during their prosecution of it. Kettlewell.

PROSECUTOR. n. f. [from prosecute.] One that carries on a thing; a pursuer of any purpose; one who pursues another by law in a criminal cause.

PROSELYTE. n. f. [προσέλυτος; proselite, Fr.] A convert; one brought over to a new opinion.

He that saw hell in's melancholy dream,
Scar'd from his sins, repented in a tright,
Had he view'd Scotland, had turn'd proselite. Cleaveland.

Men become professors and combatants for those opinions they were never convinced of, nor proselites to. Locke.

Where'er you tread,
Millions of proselites behind are led,
Through crowds of new-made converts still you go. Granville.

What numbers of proselites may we not expect? Addison.

TO PROSELYTE. v. a. To convert. A bad word.

Men of this temper cut themselves off from the opportunities of proselizing others, by averting them from their company. Government of the Tongue.

PROSEMINATION. n. f. [prosemino, proseminatus, Lat.] Propagation by seed.

Touching the impossibility of the eternal succession of men, animals or vegetables by natural propagation or prosemination, the reasons thereof shall be delivered. Hale.

PROSO'DIAN. n. f. [from prosody.] One skilled in metre or prosody.

Some have been so bad proso'dians, as from thence to derive malum, because that fruit was the first occasion of evil. Brown.

PRO'SODY. n. f. [prosodie, Fr. προσῳδία.]

The part of grammar which teaches the sound and quantity of syllables, and the measures of verse.

PROSOPOPE'IA. n. f. [προσωποποιία; prosopepe, Fr.] Personification; figure by which things are made persons.

PROSPECT. n. s. [prospectus, Latin.]

1. View of something distant.

Eden and all the coast in prospect lay. Milton.
 The Jews being under the economy of immediate revelation, might be supposed to have had a freer prospect into that heaven, whence their law descended. Decay of Piety.

It is better to marry than to burn, says St. Paul; a little burning felt pushes us more powerfully, than greater pleasures in prospect allure. Locke.

2. Place which affords an extended view.

Him God beholding from his prospect high,
 Wherein past, present, future he beholds,
 Thus spake. Milton.

3. Series of objects open to the eye.

There is a very noble prospect from this place: on the one side lies a vast extent of seas, that runs abroad further than the eye can reach: just opposite stands the green promontory of Surrentum, and on the other side the whole circuit of the bay of Naples. Addison.

4. Object of view.

Man to himself
 Is a large prospect, rais'd above the level
 Of his low creeping thoughts. Denham.
 Present, sad prospect! can he ought descry,
 But what affects his melancholy eye?
 The beauties of the ancient fabrick lost
 In chains of craggy hills, or lengths of dreary coast?
Prior.

5. View delineated; a picturesque representation of a landscape.

Claude Lorrain, on the contrary, was convinced, that taking nature as he found it seldom produced beauty; his pictures are a composition of the various draughts which he has previously made from various beautiful scenes and prospects. Reynolds.

6. View into futurity: opposed to retrospect.

To be king,
 Stands not within the prospect of belief,
 No more than to be Cawdor. Shakspeare.
 To him, who hath a prospect of the different state of perfect happiness or misery, that attends all men after this life, the measures of good and evil are mightily changed. Locke.
 If there be no prospect beyond the grave, the inference is right; let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we shall die. Locke.

Against himself his gratitude maintain'd,
 By favours past, not future prospects gain'd. Smith.

7. Regard to something future.

Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to, or provision for the remaining part of his life? Tillotson.

To PROSPECT. v. a. [prospectus, Latin.] To look forward. DiCt.

PROSPECTIVE. adj. [from prospect.]

1. Viewing at a distance.

The French king and king of Sweden are circumspect, indutritious and prospective too in this affair. Child.

To PROSPER. v. a. [prospero, Latin.] To make happy; to favour.

Kind gods, forgive
 Me that, and prosper him. Shakspeare.
 All things concur to prosper our design;
 All things to prosper any love but mine. Dryden.

To PROSPER. v. n. [prosperer, Fr.]

1. To be prosperous; to be successful.

My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it. Isaiab.
 This man encreased by little and little, and things prospered with him more and more. 2 Maccabees.
 Surer to prosper, than prosperity
 Could have assur'd us. Milton.

2. To thrive; to come forward.

All things do prosper best, when they are advanced to the better; a nursery of stocks ought to be in a more barren ground, than that whereto you remove them. Bacon.

PRO

The plants, which he had set, did thrive and prosper. Cowley.

She visits how they prosper'd, bud, and bloom. Milton.

That neat kind of acer, whereof violins and musical instruments are made, prosper well in these parts. Brown.

PROSPERITY. n. s. [prosperitas, Latin. prosperité, Fr.] Success; attainment of wishes; good fortune.

PULSA'TION. n. f. [pulsation, Fr. pulsatio, from pulso, Lat.] The act of beating or moving with quick strokes against any thing opposing.

This original of the left vein was thus contrived, to avoid the pulsation of the great artery. Brown.

These commotions of the mind and body oppress the heart, whereby it is choaked and obstructed in its pulsation. Harvey.

PULSA'TOR. n. f. [from pulso, Latin.] A striker; a beater.

PULSE. n. f. [pulsus, Lat.]

1. The motion of an artery as the blood is driven through it by the heart, and as it is perceived by the touch.

Pulse is thus accounted for: when the left ventricle of the heart contracts, and throws its blood into the great artery, the blood in the artery is not only thrust forward towards the extremities, but the channel of the artery is likewise dilated; when the impetus of the blood against the sides of the artery ceases; that is, when the left ventricle ceases to contract, then the spiral fibres of the artery, by their natural elasticity, return again to their former state, and contract the channel of the artery, till it is again dilated by the diastole of the heart; this diastole of the artery is called its pulse, and the time the spiral fibres are returning to their natural state, is the distance between two pulses: this pulse is in all the arteries of the body at the same time; an high pulse is either vehement or strong, but if the dilatation of the artery does not rise to its usual height, it is called a low or weak pulse; but if between its dilatations there passes more time than usual, it is called a slow pulse: again, if the coats of an artery feel harder than usual from any cause whatsoever, it is called an hard pulse; but if by any contrary cause they are softer, then it is called a soft pulse. Quincy.

Think you, I bear the shears of destiny?
Have I commandment on the pulse of life? Shakspeare.

The prosperity of the neighbour kingdoms is not inferior to that of this, which, according to the pulse of states, is a great diminution of their health. Clarendon.

My body is from all diseases free;
My temp'rate pulse does regularly beat. Dryden.

If one drop of blood remain in the heart at every pulse, those, in many pulses, will grow to a considerable mass. Arbutnot.

2. Oscillation; vibration; alternate expansion and contraction; alternate approach and recession.

The vibrations or pulses of this medium, that they may cause the alternate fits of easy transmission and easy reflexion, must be swifter than light, and by consequence above seven hundred thousand times swifter than sounds. Newton.

3. To feel one's PULSE. To try or know one's mind artfully.

4. [from pull.] Leguminous plants. Plants not reaped but pulled or plucked.

With Elijah he partook,
Or as a guest with Daniel at his pulse. Milton.
Mortals, from your fellows blood abstain?
While corn and pulse by nature are bestow'd. Dryden.

Tares are as advantageous to land as other pulse. Mortimer.

To PULSE. v. n. [from the noun.] To beat as the pulse.

The heart, when separated wholly from the body in some animals, continues still to pulse for a considerable time. Ray.

PULSION. n. f. [from pulsus, Lat.] The act of driving or of forcing forward: in opposition to suction or traction.

Admit it might use the motion of pulsion, yet it could never that of attraction. More.

By attraction we do not here understand what is improperly called so, in the operations of drawing, sucking, and pumping, which is really pulsion and trusion. Bentley.

PULVERABLE. adj. [pulveris, Lat.] Possible to be reduced to dust.

In making the first ink, I could by filtration separate a pretty store of a black pulverable substance that remained in the fire. Boyle.

Have you pulvilled the coachman and postilion, that they may not stink of the stable? Congreve.

PUMICE. n. f. [pumex, pumicis, Lat.] A slag or cinder of some fossil, originally bearing another form, reduced to this state by fire: it is a lax and spongy matter full of little pores and cavities; and of a pale, whitish, grey colour: the pumice is found particularly about the burning mountains. Hill.

So long I shot, that all was spent,
Though pumice stones I hastily hent,
And threw; but nought avail'd. Spenser.
Etna and Vesuvius, which consist upon sulphur,
Shoot forth smoke, ashes, and pumice, but no water. Bacon.

Near the Lucrine lake,
Steams of sulphur raise a stifling heat,
And through the pores of the warm pumice sweat. Addison.

PUMMEL. n. f. See POMMEL.

PUMP. n. f. [pompe, Dutch and French.]

1. An engine by which water is drawn up from wells: its operation is performed by the pressure of the air.

A pump grown dry will yield no water, unless you pour a little water into it first. More.

In the framing that great ship built by Hiero, Athenæus mentions this instrument as being instead of a pump, by the help of which one man might easily drain out the water, though very deep. Wilkins.

Pumps may be made single with a common pump handle, for one man to work them, or double for two. Mortimer.

2. A shoe with a thin sole and low heel.

Get good strings to your beads, new ribbons to your pumps. Shakspeare.

Follow me this jest, now, till thou hast worn out thy pump, that when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain singular. Shakspeare.

Thalia's ivy shews her prerogative over comical poesy; her mask, mantle, and pumps are ornaments belonging to the stage. Peacham.

The water and sweat
Splish splash in their pumps. Swift.

To PUMP. v. n. [pompen, Dutch.] To work a pump; to throw out water by a pump.

The flame lasted about two minutes, from the time the pumper began to draw out air. Boyle.

PUMPION. n. f. [pepo.] A plant. Miller.
We'll use this gross watry pumpion, and teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakespeare.

PUN. n. f. [I know not whence this word is to be deduced, to pun, is to grind or beat with a pestle; can pun mean an empty sound, like that of a mortar beaten, as clench, the old word for pun, seems only a corruption of clink?] An equivocation; a quibble; an expression where a word has at once different meanings.
It is not the word, but the figure that appears on the medal: cuniculus may stand for a rabbit or a mine, but the picture of a rabbit is not the picture of a mine: a pun can be no more engraven, than it can be translated. Addison.

But fill their purse, our poet's work is done,
Alike to them by pathos, or by pun. Pope.

PUN. v. n. [from the noun.] To quibble; to use the same word at once in different senses.
The hand and head were never lost, of those Who dealt in doggrel, or who pun'd in prose. Dryd.
You would be a better man, if you could pun like Sir Tristram. Tatler.

PUNCH. v. a. [poissonner, French.] To bore or perforate by driving a sharp instrument.
When I was mortal, my anointed body
By thee was punched full of deadly holes. Shaks.
By reason of its constitution it continued open,
as I have seen a hole punched in leather. Wiser.
Your work will sometimes require to have holes punched in it at the forge; you must then make a steel punch, and harden the point of it without tempering. Moxen.

The fly may, with the hollow and sharp tube of her womb, punch and perforate the skin of the crura, and cast her eggs into her body. Ray.

PUNCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A pointed instrument, which, driven by a blow, perforates bodies; it is often used of an instrument which being hollow cuts out a piece.
The shank of a key the punch cannot strike, because the shank is not forged with substance sufficient; but the drill cuts a true round hole. Mox.

—To see thee here, to see thee there, to see thee pass thy puncto. Shakespeare.

PUNCTUAL. adj. [punctuel, French.]
1. Comprised in a point; consisting in a point.
This earth a spot, a grain,
An atom with the firmament compar'd,
And all her number'd stars, that seem to rowl Spaces incomprehensible; for such
Their distance argues, and their swift return
Diurnal, merely to officiate light
Round this opacous earth, this punctual spot. Milt.

2. Exact; nice; punctilious.
A gentleman punctual of his word, when he had heard that two had agreed upon a meeting, and the one neglected his hour, would say of him, he is a young man then. Bacon.
This mistake to avoid, we must observe the punctual differences of time, and so distinguish thereof, as not to confound or lose the one in the other. Brown.

That the women are menstruent, and the men pubescent at the year of twice seven, is accounted a punctual truth. Brown.
He was punctual and just in all his dealings. Atter.

The correspondence of the death and sufferings of our Lord is so punctual and exact, that they seem rather like a history of events past, than a prophecy of such as were to come. Rogers.

PUNCTUALITY. n. f. [from punctual.] Nicety; scrupulous exactness.
For the encouragement of those that hereafter should serve other princes with that punctuality as Sophronio had done, he commanded him to offer him a blank, wherein he might set down his own conditions. Howel.

His memory was serviceable, but not officious; faithful to things and business, but unwillingly retaining the contexture and punctualities of the words. Fell.

Though some of these punctualities did not so much conduce to preserve the text, yet all of them shew the infinite care which was taken, that there might be no mistake in a single letter. Grew.

PUN

PUNCTUALLY. adv. [from punctual.] Nicely; exactly; scrupulously.
There were no use at all for war or law, if every man had prudence to conceive how much of right were due both to and from himself, and were withal so punctually just to perform what he knew requisite, and to rest contented with his own. Raleigh.

Concerning the heavenly bodies, there is so much exactness in their motions, that they punctually come to the same periods to the hundredth part of a minute. Ray.

I freely bring what Moses hath related to the test, comparing it with things as now they stand; and finding his account to be punctually true, I fairly declare what I find. Woodward.

PUNCTUALNESS. n. f. [from punctual.] Exactness; nicety.
The most literal translation of the scriptures, in the most natural signification of the words, is generally the best; and the same punctualness which debaseth other writings, preserveth the spirit and majesty of the sacred text. Felton.

PUNCTUATION. n. f. [punctum, Latin.] The act or method of pointing.
It ought to do it willingly, without being forced to it by any change in the words or punctuation. Addison.

TO PUNISH. v. a. [punio, Latin.]

1. To chastise; to afflict with penalties or death for some crime.

Your purpos'd low correction
Is such, as basest and the meanest wretches
Are punished with. Shakspeare.
If you will not hearken, I will punish you seven times more for your sins. Leviticus.
A greater pow'r
Now rul'd him, punish'd in the shape he sinn'd. Dryden.

Will he draw out,
For anger's sake, finite to infinite
In punish'd man? Milton.

2. To revenge a fault with pain or death.
I will punish your offences with the rod, and your sin with scourges. Bible.

PUNISHABLE. adj. [punissable, Fr. from punish.] Worthy of punishment; capable of punishment.

Theft is naturally punishable, but the kind of punishment is positive, and such lawful, as men shall think with discretion convenient to appoint. Hooker.

Sith creatures, which have no understanding, can shew no will; and where no will is, there is no sin; and only that which sinneth, is subject to punishment; which way should any such creature be punishable by the law of God? Hooker.
Their bribery is less punishable, when bribery opened the door by which they entered. Taylor.

PUNISHABLENESS. n. f. [from punishable.]
The quality of deserving or admitting punishment.

PUNISHER. n. f. [from punish.] One who inflicts pains for a crime.

From granting me, as I from begging peace. Milton.

PUNISHMENT. n. f. [punissement, French.]
Any infliction or pain imposed in vengeance of a crime.

The house of endless pain is built thereby,
In which ten thousand sorts of punishments
The cursed creatures do eternally torment. Spenser.

Unless it were a bloody murderer,
I never gave them condign punishment. Shakspeare.
Thou, through the judgment of God, shall receive just punishment for thy pride. 2 Maccabees.

Is not destruction to the wicked? and a strange punishment to the workers of iniquity? J. b.

He that doubts, whether or no he should honour his parents, wants not reason, but punishment. Holyd.

Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.

Because that which is necessary to beget certainty in the mind, namely, impartial consideration, is in a man's power, therefore the belief or disbelief of those things is a proper subject for rewards and punishments. Wilkins.

The rewards and punishments of another life, which the Almighty has established, as the enforcements of his law, are of weight enough to determine the choice, against whatever pleasure or pain this life can shew. Locke.

PUNITION. n. f. [punition, Fr. punitio, Lat.] Punishment. Ainsw.

PUNITIVE. adj. [from punio, Latin.]

Where infant punks their tender voices try. Dryd.

PUNSTER. n. f. [from pun.] A quibbler; a low wit who endeavours at reputation by double meaning.

His mother was cousin to Mr. Swan, gamester and punster of London. Arbutnot and Pope.

TO PUNT. v. n. To play at basset and ombre.

One is for setting up an assembly for basset, where none shall be admitted to punt, that have not taken the oaths. Addison.

When a duke to Janfen punts at White's,
Or city heir in mortgage melts away,
Satan himself feels far less joy than they. Pope.

PUNY. adj. [puis ne, French.]

1. Young.

2. Inferiour; petty; of an under rate.

Is not the king's name forty thousand names?
Arm, arm, my name; a puny subject strikes
At thy great glory. Shakspeare.

Know me not,
Left that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones,
In puny battle slay me. Shakspeare.

Drive
The puny habitants; or, if not drive,
Seduce them to our party. Milton.

This friendship is of that strength, as to remain unshaken by such assaults, which yet are strong enough to shake down and annihilate the friendship of little puny minds. South.

Jove at their head ascending from the sea,
A shoal of puny pow'rs attend his way. Dryden.

PUNY. n. f. A young unexperienced un-seasoned wretch.

Tenderness of heart makes a man but a puny in this sin; it spoils the growth, and cramps the crowning exploits of this vice. South.

TO PUP. v. n. [from puppy.] To bring forth whelps: used of a bitch bringing young.

PUPIL. n. f. [pupilla, Latin.]

1. The apple of the eye.

Looking in a glass, when you shut one eye, the pupil of the other, that is open, dilateth. Bacon.

Setting a candle before a child, bid him look upon it, and his pupil shall contract itself very much to exclude the light; as when after we have been some time in the dark, a bright light is suddenly brought in and set before us, till the pupils of our eyes have gradually contracted. Ray.

The uvea has a musculous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil of the eye. More.

The rays, which enter the eye at several parts of the pupil, have several obliquities to the glasses. Newton.

2. [pupille, Fr. pupillus, Lat.] A scholar;
one under the care of a tutor.

My master sues to her, and she hath taught her suitor,

He being her pupil, to become her tutor. Shaksp.

One of my father's servants,
With store of tears this treason 'gan unfold,
And said my guardian would his pupil kill. Fairfax.

If this arch-politician find in his pupils any remorse, any fear of God's future judgments, he persuades them that God hath so great need of men's souls, that he will accept them at any time, and upon any condition. Raleigh.

Tutors should behave reverently before their pupils. L'Estrange.

The great work of a governor is, to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom. Locke.

3. A ward; one under the care of a guardian.

Tell me, thou pupil to great Pericles,

PUP

What are the grounds

To undertake so young, so vast a care? Dryden.

So some weak shoot, which else would poorly rise,
Jove's tree adopts, and lifts him to the skies;

Through the new pupil soft'ning juices flow,

Thrust forth the gems, and give the flow'rs to blow. Tickel.

PUPILAGE. n. f. [from pupil.]

1. State of being a scholar.

The excellent doctor most readily received this votary and profelyte to learning into his care and pupilage for several years. Fell.

The severity of the father's brow, whilst they are under the discipline of pupilage, should be relaxed as fast as their age, discretion, and good behaviour allow. Locke.

2. Wardship; minority.

Three sons he dying left, all under age,
By means whereof their uncle Vortigern
Usurp'd the crown, during their pupilage;
Which the infants tutors gathering to tear,
Them closely into Armorick did bear. Spenser.

PUPILARY. adj. [pupillaire, Fr. pupillaris, Lat. from pupil.] Pertaining to a pupil or ward.

PUPPET. n. f. [poupée, Fr. pupus, Lat.]

1. A small image moved by wire in a mock drama; a wooden tragedian.

Once Zelmane could not stir, but that as if they had been puppets, whose motion stood only upon her pleasure, Basilus with serviceable steps, Gynecia with greedy eyes would follow her. Sidney.

Divers of them did keep in their houses certain things made of cotton wool, in the manner of puppets.
Abbot.

His last wife was a woman of breeding, good humour and complaisance; as for you, you look like a puppet moved by clock-work. Arbutnot.

As the pipes of some carv'd organ move,
The gilded puppets dance. Pope.

In florid impotence he speaks,
And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks. Pope.

2. A word of contempt.

Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shalt be shewn
In Rome as well as I. Shakspeare.
Oh excellent motion! oh exceeding puppet! Shak.

Who wisely hides his wood and wire. Swift.

PUPPETSHOW. n. f. [puppet and show.] A mock drama performed by wooden images moved by wire.

Tim, you have a taste I know,
And often see a puppetshow. Swift.

To induce him to be fond of learning, he would frequently carry him to the puppetshow.
Arbutnot and Pope.

A president of the council will make no more impression upon my mind, than the sight of a puppet- show. Pope.

PUPPY. n. f. [poupée, French.]

1. A whelp; progeny of a bitch.

He
Talks as familiarly of roaring lions,
As maids of thirteen do of puppy dogs. Shakspeare.

The rogues slighted me into the river with as little remorse, as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies, fifteen i' th' litter. Shakspeare.

The sow to the bitch, your puppies are all blind:
L'Estrange.

Nature does the puppy's eyelid close,
Till the bright sun has nine times set and rose. Gay.

2. A name of contemptuous reproach to a man.

I shall laugh myself to death at this pupp- headed monster; a most scurvy monster! Shaksp.

Thus much I have added, because there are some puppies which have given it out. Raleigh.

I found my place taken up by an ill-bred awkward puppy, with a money bag under each arm. Addison.

TO PUPPY. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring whelps.

PUR

PURBLIND. adj. [corrupted from pore-blind, which is still used in Scotland; pore and blind.] Nearighted; short-sighted.

That any purblind eye may find it out. Shakspeare.

'Tis known to several
Of head piece extraordinary; lower messes
Perchance, are to this business purblind. Shakspeare.

Like to purblind moles, no greater light than that little which they shun. Drummond.

Darkness, that here surrounded our purblind understandings, will vanish at the dawning of eternal day. Boyle.

Dropt in blear thick-sighted eyes,
They'd make them see in darkest night,
Like owls, though purblind in the light. Hudibras.

Purblind man
Sees but a part o' th' chain, the nearest links;
His eyes not carrying to that equal beam,
That poises all above. Dryden and Lee.

PURBLINDNESS. n. [from purblind.]
Shortness of sight.

PURCHASABLE. adj. [from purchase.]
That may be purchased, bought, or obtained.

Money being the counterbalance to all things purchaseable by it, as much as you take off from the value of money, so much you add to the price of things exchanged for it. Locke.

TO PURCHASE. v. a. [pourchasser, Fr.]

1. To acquire, not inherit.

2. To buy for a price.

You have many a purchase'd slave,
Which like your asses, and your dogs, and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part. Shakspeare.
His sons buried him in the cave, which Abraham purchase'd of the sons of Heth. Genesis.

3. To obtain at any expence, as of labour or danger.

A world who would not purchase with a bruise?
Milton.

4. To expiate or recompense by a fine or forfeit.

Nor tears nor prayers shall purchase out abuses;
Therefore use none. Shakspeare.

PURCHASE. n. s. [pourchas, old French;
from the verb.]

1. Any thing bought or obtained for a price.

He that procures his child a good mind, makes a better purchase for him, than if he laid out the money for an addition to his former acres. Locke.

Our thriving dean has purchase'd land;
A purchase which will bring him clear
Above his rent four pounds a year. Swift.

2. Any thing of which possession is taken any other way than by inheritance.

A beauty wailing and distressed widow Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye;
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension. Shakspeare.

The fox repairs to the wolf's cell, and takes possession of his stores; but he had little joy of the purchase. L'Estrange.

PURCHASER. n. s. [from purchase.] A buyer; one that gains any thing for a price.

Upon one only alienation and change, the pur- chaser is to pass both licence, fine, and recovery.
Bacon.

So unhappy have been the *purchase*s of church lands, that, though in such *purchase*s men have usually the cheapest pennyworths, yet they have not always the best bargains. South.

Most of the old statues may be well supposed to have been cheaper to their first owners, than they are to a modern purchase. Addison.

An alabaster box of pure nard. Milton.

What philosophy shall comfort a villain, that is haled to the rack for murdering his prince? his cup is full of pure and unmingled sorrow, his body is rent with torment, his name with ignominy, his soul with shame and sorrow, which are to last eternally.
Taylor.

Pure and mixt, when applied to bodies, are much akin to simple and compound; so a guinea is pure gold, if it has in it no alloy. Watts.

4. Genuine; real; unadulterated.

Pure religion before God and the Father is this,
to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction,
and to keep himself unspotted from the world.
James.

5. Not connected with any thing extrinsick: as, pure mathematicks.

Mathematicks in its latitude is divided into pure and mixed; and though the pure do handle only abstract quantity in the general, as geometry; yet that which is mixed doth consider the quantity of some particular determinate subject. Wilkins.

When a proposition expresses that the predicate is connected with the subject, it is called a pure proposition; as every true christian is an honest man.
Watts.
